TWENTY-SIXTH BIRTHDAY
OF THE
STAR PAPER OF AMERICA
JANUARY 1, 1864.
The New York Mercury
FOR THE COMING YEAR.

After more than a quarter of a century of uninterupted success, The New York Mercury—standing first on the muster-roll of the Literary Press in this country—points proudly to its past career as a guarantee of new triumphs in the future.

Heretofore, it has eclipsed all rivalry: but it proposes to make the coming year memorable by clipsing its own past history, and looming up before the world as the most marvelous specimen of a fascinating, brilliant, amusing, and comprehensive Literary Newspaper that has ever been published in either hemisphere

will be laid under contribution to give brilliancy to its columns, and side by side with original productions of the most popular romancists of the Old World, will be placed the cheif d'Œuvres of the most eminent story writers of the New,

Miss A. E. Braddon, Autheress of 'Aurora Floyd,' 'Lady Audell's Secret,' 'John Marchmont's Legacy,' etc., etc,' who has suddenly risen, like a star of the first magnitude in the literary horizon of Great Britain, has been specially engaged to supply the New York Mercury from time to time with the wonderful creations of her genius, at a cost which noother weekly in America could venture to incur.

Among the multitude of distinguished writers and artists who have become familiar to the masses through the vast circulation of the Star Weekly of America, may be mentioned the following, all of whom are still upon its staff:

Dr. J. H. Robinson, Margret Blount Ned Buntline, Arthur M. Grainger, Grace Gardner, Felix O. C. Darley, Miss M. E Barddon, Cousin May Carleton W. O. Eaton George Martial, Julia S. Ingraham, Edward Willett, Mary Chief, George Albany.

Scores of other distinguished literati, under various noms de plume, contribute to its columns, while its pictorial illustrations from the inimitable pencil of Felix O C. Darley, Esq., the best draughtsman of the age.

The War, which has giving the coup de grace to so many pretentious publication, and half destroyed those that still survive, has added thousands to the circulation of The New York Mercury.

Its heart stirring short stories, its military historietts, its machless serial romances, its racy burlesques, its genial wit and humor, its delicious gossip, its fairy tales for little folks, its rare poetry, its fresh and vigorous editorials, the infinite variety of its contents, and the large amount of reading matter that it comprises, render it welcome everywhere, and to all classes of society. Containing, as it does Forty Columns of closely-printed matter, it may safely be pronounced the cheapest, as well as the best Literary Newspaper extant.

Three favorite writers, Doctor J. H. Robinson, Cousin May Carlten, and Ned Buntline, are now preparing three stories for the New York Mercury. One of these productions will be commenced in the Opening Number of the New Year. The authors being aware of this fact, are engaged in an emulative contest for precedence, and the result will unquestionably be that the most effective story ever penned by any of the three, will commence in the New Year's Number of the great Representative Weekly of the Western World.

The New York Mercury is sold by all newsmen and periodical dealers in America. To subscribers, it is regularly mailed every Saturday morning, for $2 a year: three copies for $5; six copies for $9 eight copies for $12, with an extra copy, free. to the getter-up of the club. Six month's subscriptions received. Always write plainly the name of your Post Office, county and State. We take the notes of all solvent banks at par, Payment must invariably be made in advance.

MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS.—The special object and aim in the publication of this magazine, is to present Judicious, Reliable, and Practical information in all matters pertaining to ladies' and children's dress.

Information of the greatest possible importance to Milliners, Dress-makers, and every lady who wish to know the prevailing modes in New York and Paris.

To all enterprising ladies and industrious mothers, we shall endeavor to furnish many useful and practical suggestions in relation to the proper combination of colors, choosing materials, including cutting and making dresses, and children's clothes which of necessity must occupy a much larger portion of a woman's time, when no reliable authority is at hand to be consulted—suggestions which cannot fail to prove a source of much gratification, economy, personal refinement, and home comfort.

Do not fail to bear in mind that we furnish, in value, during the year, more than $3 in full-size patterns alone; while in plates, engravings, reliable information on fashions, more than can be secured in any or all the other fashion magazines put together, and yet the yearly subscriptions being $1 with the extra fifty cents worth of full size patterns sent as a premium, makes the yearly subscription to cost really only fifty cents, independent of the Carte de Visite. Do not fail to subscribe for the Mirror, if you wish to secure it promptly as it is sent in advance to subscribers.

CLIFTON HOUSE,

Mankato, Minnesota.

THE proprietor would announce to the traveling publicthat his house is now completed and furnished throughout in the best style and he is now prepared to accommodate all who may favor him with their patronage. From long experience in the hotel business in eastern cities he flatters himself that he understands the wants of the traveling public and will spare no pains to make the Clifton an agreeable stopping place. All who may be visiting Mankato, either for business or pleasure, especially those from the surrounding counties are invited to call and satisfy themselves. Attached to the premises are stables not excelled in the State either for capacity or convenience. The proprietor thankful for the very liberal patronage bestowed upon his house, would say to all stopping at the Clifton you will meet the same cordial and welcome reception as heretofore. Farmers sustain the Clifton House and by so doing promote your own interest. A word to the wise is sufficient.

FINKLE & LYON'S

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do; will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood; and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

PLEASE CALL AND EXAMINE, OR SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

The world-renowned author, in this admiral Lecture, clearly proves from his own experience that the awful consequence of Self-abuse may be effectually removed without medicine, and without dangerous surgical operations, bougies, instruments, rings or cordials, pointing out a mode of cure at once certain and effectual, by which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately, and radically. HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels. Cures Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Bodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes. Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehension of an attack, escape the scourge; and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health, within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dyspepsia and in less confirmed forms of Indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless aperient, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs. Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of bilious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally resorting to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

HELMBOLD'S.

Genuine Preparations.

COMPOUND Fluid extract Buchu, a Positive and Specific Remedy for diseases of the Bladder, Kidneys, Gravel, and Dropsical Swellings.

This Medicine increases the power of Digestion, and excite the Absorbents into healthy action, by which the Watery or Calcareous depositions, and all Unnatural Enlargements are reduced, as well as Pain and Inflamation.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

For Weakness arising from Excesses, Habits of Dissipation, Early Indiscretion, of abuse, attended with the following symptoms:—

Indisposition to Exertion. Loss of power, Loss of Memory, Difficulty of Breathing, Weak Nerves, Trembling, Horror of Disease, Wakefulness, Dimness of Vision, Pain in the Back, Universal Lassitude of the Muscular System, Hot Hands, Flushing of the Body, Dryness of the Skin, Eruptions on the Face Pallid Countenance These symptoms, if allowed to go on, which this medicine invariably removes, soon follows Impotency, Fatuity, Epileptic Fits, in one of which the Patient may expire.

Who can say that they are not frequently followed by those "Direful Diseases" "Insanity and consumption." Many are aware of the cause of their suffering, but none will confess the records of the insane asylums. And melancholy deaths by Consumption bear ample witness to the truth of the assertion. The Constitution once affected with organic Weakness, requires the aid of Medicine to Strengthen and Invigorate the system.

Which Helmbold's Extract Buchu invariably does.

A trial will convince the most skeptical.

Females—Females—Females—In many affections peculiar to Females the Extract Buchu is unequaled by any other remedy, as in Chlorosis or Retention, Irregularity, Painfulness, or suppression of customary Evacuations. Ulcerated or Scirrhous state of the Uterus, Leuchorrhea or Whites, Sterility, and for all complaints incident to the sex, whether arising from indiscretion Habits of Dissipation, or in the decline or change of life. Take no more Balsam, Mercury, or unpleasant medicines for unpleasant and dangerous diseases Helmbold's Extract Buchu and improved Rose wash cures secret diseases in all their stages, at little expense. Little or no change in diet, no inconvenience, and no exposure.

It causes a frequent desire and gives strength to Urinate, thereby removing obstructions, preventing and curing strictures of the Urethra, allaying Pain and inflammation, so frequent in the class of diseases, and expelling all poisonous diseases and wornout matter. Thousands upon thousands who have been the victims of Quacks, and who have paid heavy fees to be cured in a short time, have found they were deceived, and that the poison has, by the use of powerful astringents, been dried up in the system, to break out in an aggravated form, and perhaps after marriage. Use Helmbold's Extract Buchu for all affections and diseases of the urinary organs, whether existing in male or female, from whatever cause originating and no matter of how long standing. Diseases of these organs requires the aid of diuretic. Helmbold's extract Buchu is the great diuretic, and is certain to have the desired effect in all Diseases for which it is recommended. Poetry.

From the New York Mercury.

MINNIE LYLE.

I'm sitting in the glooming, Minnie Lyle, [brain,
And pleasant thoughts are flitting through my
Of days when we went roaming, Minnie Lyle,
Amid the haunts we ne'er shall see again.
I'm thinking of the day when by your side,
With trembling lip my vows of love had birth;
You blushed, and promised to become my bride,
And I had gained my dearest wish on earth.

Your hair was light and flowing, Minnie Lyle,
Your winning eyes a beauteous azure blue,
And your cheeks, like roses growing, Minnie Lyle,
Were blooming with a rich and healthful hue.
Your merry voice was music to my ear,
True happiness to see your pleasing smile,
And naught on earth to me was half so dear,
As you, my own, my precious Minnie Lyle.

We've journeyed on together, Minnie Lyle,
Through many scenes, and many happy years,
And we've clung each to the other, Minnie Lyle,
And shared each other's hopes, delights, fears.
We've traveled with the gay and tho'tless throng,
And mingled in the turmoil, care, and strife,
In peace and harmony we've rolled along—
Congenial souls along the road of life.

Our brows are growing wrinkled, Minnie Lyle,
Our eyesight is beginning to decay,
And our hair with gray is sprinkled, Minnie Lyle,
The freshness of our youth has passed away.
I loved you when your face was young and fair,
When furrows deep were strangers to your brow
When you had winning eyes and golden hair,
I loved you then—I love you better now.

Select Miscellany.

The Cousins from the Country.

BY MRS. RACHEL RICHELIEU.

'Oh dear,' said Kate Earnshaw, as the bell rang announcing visitors, 'I am tired of all this fashionable folly; what real pleasure can a sensible person find in a fashionable call? Time, limited to fifteen minutes; phases the same with but little deviation; we are glad to see them, and at the same time wishing them in Jerico.'

'Why, Kate!' exclaimed her elegant sister Anne, languidly, 'I should die of ennui, were it not for my friends and their entertainments.'

'Friends,' said Kate, 'lose your wealth and where will you find them?'

'Well, we cannot blame them, they have their positions to maintain,' said Mrs. Earnshaw, a worldly woman of fashion, 'and I wish, Kate, that you would be sensible, like Anne, and take the world as it is; I fear you lack the refinement to appreciate these things, and Roland is altogether too much like his father,' she continued, in a dissatisfied tone.

Kate wished to ask her mother why she married him, but it was not quite safe to remind her of their 'position,' at the time of that event, for he had won his wealth, by industry and energy.

The caller proved to be a gentleman to see Mr. Earnshaw, and was directed to the store, so the conversation was resumed.

'Roland knows what real enjoyment is, I know,' said Kate spiritedly, as she always spoke in defence of her favorite, and she was no less a favorite with him; 'It is getting dreadful dull here,' she continued, 'I wish we could give our ball soon or get up some other amusemen better still.

'I have expected you would bring home some of your porteges' of the Five Points some day,' said Anne, sneeringly.

'Oh, I have it,' exclaimed Kate, not heeding her sister's taunt, 'I mean to write to Uncle Jacob Fenton, and ask him to let Milly come and spend a few weeks with us; it will be so amusing to see the little country girl's wonder and curiosity at every thing.'

'Kate Earnshaw, are you crazy? Do you think I would endure the disgrace the country nuisance would be continually bringing upon us with her thick cowhides, high-neck gowns red hands, and smell of the dairy?'

'Now Anne, don't interfere with my project,' said Kate, coaxingly putting her arm around her sister's neck; 'if you say nay, mamma will say nay, too. I will take care she does not annoy you in the least; you know Uncle Jacob has money enough and if her things prove so bad and old fashioned, I can fit her out with her pocket money and some of my old clothes, good enough to take her around to see the city sights, and at home she shall come no nearer you than the back parlor.'

'I suppose you think no one can withstand that eloquent tongue of your's, Kate; can you alter large feet and hands, coarse and vulgar manners, and language? No, no, she would never do in this house, so do not think any more about it, Kate,' said Anne, who was really very fond of her sister, although she called her tastes plebeian. She was always assured of her assistance, and her kindness of heart made her loved by all

'We'll shall see what we shall see,' muttered Kate, as she ran out to meet Roland.

'What now, my pet, have you just rejected a proposal, or vexed for the want of one, that you look so perplexed?'

'Nonsense Roll. I want you to aid me in getting Milly Fenton here to stay a few weeks, just to have some amusement, you know.'

'Oh, Katie, what treason,' he said, with a quisical look in his eyes; 'how she would shock mother's nerves, and lady Anne, you would never dare mention such a thing in her presence.'

'But I did though, Roll, and as you predict, she was horror struk.'

'Just so my pet; but I have an idea myself about that; go and get your wrappings, sister mine, and we'll go down to see father about it on our own responsibility.'

Away she ran to get ready.

'O, dear, Kate! what a whirlwind you are; you've disturbed my nap, and left the doors all open, this cold day,' said Anne, pettishly; 'Where are you going now?'

'Down to the store with Roland for a walk,' said Kate demurely.

'I have half a mind to go too,' said Anne.

'Oh, you had better lie still, and get rested for the reunion at Mrs. Choate's, this evening; this winter wind will make you look coarse and old.'

'Certainly, I did not think of that, how thoughtful you are, Kate, you had better not go either.'

'Oh, never mind me, Roland wants me to go with him,' said Kate hurrying out.

'I do believe they are in mischief,' thought Anne, looking out of the window after them.

They met Mr. Earnshaw coming from the store.

'Where now, truants?' said he, smiling.

'We were going to see one Isaac Earnshaw, do you know him, sir?'

'I know he has an unruly daughter who is on 'mischief bent,' I'll be bound.'

'No sir, no mischief, only Roland would like the pleasure of his country cousin's company in town this winter; just for a divertisment you know.'

'Indeed, and Miss Kate, as the instigator of this scheme, knows that she must have a powerful ally in the field, or her cousin will not hold good—pitted against her lady mother, and sister Anne.'

'I think your sanction, and Kate's promise to keep her out of their way would make matters smooth in that quarter, sir,' said Roland, 'as they know that Kate does not care to go much in society this winter.'

'I wish Anne liked it less,' said her father gravely, 'and more than all, would learn that all is not worth that has a fashionable exterior, and the rough casket may contain a jewel.'

'Allow us to plan this thing, sir, and we may teach her to see differently,' said Roland.

'Can I trust two such wild heads not to go too far.'

'We will do nothing you would not concur in,' said Kate, eagerly, seeing that Roland had some fun in view.

'Very well, children, said Mr. Earnshaw, I will try and make it right with your mother.'

'I think we ought to go down after Milly,' said Roland, 'it would be more agreeable for her, than coming alone among strangers, and—your plotting easier, eh?' put in Mr. Earnshaw, slyly.

'Well, I will make the way for you at dinner time, and you can start as soon as you like.'

'I am not sure that Uncle Jacob will wish to let her come, he will feel so lonely, now sister is dead.'

Mr. Earnshaw had been down there two years before.

'Is she so unsophisticated and awkward, father?'

'Ah, Katie, I fear you need a lesson, too. I shall leave that for you to find out.'

He announced their visit at dinner, and exclamations of disapproval, 'not loud but deep,' followed. Mr. Earnshaw carried his point as ever.

'I should not care if it would not annoy Ann so,' said Mrs. E——, 'I dare say she would pass.'

'Yes I dare say she would pass for our own country cousin, sweet creature; you had better keep her out of my way tho' or I shall not restrain the propensity to ridicule her,' said Anne.

'Anne, my dear sister's child must not be insulted, if she has not had the advantages you have,' said her father.

Anne pouted, and looked daggers at Kate, who said, coaxingly—

'Don't be cross now sis, I promise she shall be kept our of your way.'

'She had better be,' she replied, refusing to come out of her sulks.

In a day or two, Kate and Roland started for Mr. Fentons. Arriving at the station, Roland looked about for some conveyance to carry them to their Uncle's, a mile distant. Before a dry good's store stood a pretty light wagon, and Roland was wishing he had possession for a short time when he saw a handsome young man come out of the store, and although four years had passed since he had seen him, he recognszed him as the son of Uncle Jacob, who, at that time came up to the city on business, a shy, sunburnt youth of twenty, too bashful to yield to the pursuasion of Roland and his father, to go home with them, (he had seen them at the store), so he had seen none of the family but the two. Roland stepped forward to introduce himself, when he was met by the cordial salutations:

'Why cousin Roland! is it possible; I did not know you had stepped out of your traveling boots yet.'

'I have been home two months,' said Roland as he shook hands with him.

'I hav'nt been home a week yet; I suppose you know I've been in Calafornia and Cuba, these last two years,' said young Fenton and not waiting a reply, continued, 'I've some private speculation there of my own; what lady have you left so ungallantly alone.'

'Come and see,' said Roland.

Kate was wondering who he had met that he knew and admiring his graceful way and winning smile She and Anne had never seen their cousins whose mother was half sister to Mr. Earnshaw,

'Kate this is cousin George Fenton.

Kate looked bewildered for an instant.

'She is not inclined to own me,' said George smiling.

'I did not know as I had such a cousin,' said Kate recovering herself. I am richer than I thought I was.

'And I did not know as I was ever to have the pleasure of seeing either of my fair cousins;' and his look expressed his admiration of the one present; 'I had imagined them somewhat different from the reality.'

'How?' said Kate. 'Handsomer?'

'That could not well be,' said he, gallantly; 'perhaps a little more stiff and proud with a few exquisite airs,' he added laughingly.

'Don't judge too soon, you havn't seen the other,' said Roland.

'And I am afraid I shall not have that pleasure for a long while, as I think of returning to Cuba in the Spring and I shall take father and Milly with me: our preparations are already commenced.'

And that reminds me of the object of our visit; we have come to steal Milly for a while,'

'Oh I cannot spare her when I have only been with her four days in two years, my dear cousin,' said George.

'Well what prevents you from going with us too,' said Roland.

'I should like to see Fred Astor before returning to Cuba,' replied George, musingly. 'I declare the opportunity is tempting; we'll see what Milly says,' he added as he lifted Kate into the carriage.

'You see, George, sister Anne is a good hearted girl; but mother and 'boarding sshool' have put many erroneous ideas of fashion and gentility into her head, and we have a little plan for her benefit which I think you can aid us in, if you will.'

But for want of time and space we must leave them to their visit and plotting and look in upon Mrs Earnshaw three weeks later.

'I suppose Kate and Roland will be home to-night,' said Mrs. Earnshaw.

'I hope not if they bring that country specimen in with them, for I expect Mr. Lynde this evening, the gentlemen from Sacramento City I met at Madame Reese's last night. I would not have him see her for anything. If I can keep up the interest of my poor self, he so plainly showed when he asked to call upon me I shall give Mr. Winter the cold shoulder.'

'Is he worth the trouble of winning?' said Mrs, Earnshaw. 'Be sure of that my darling, before you loose a rich prize already won,'

'I have heard he has a rich Cuba plantation, mother, and he is so much handsomer and more noble looking than Mr. Winter. They must be rich or they (he and his sister I mean,) would not be visiting the Astors; and they are so popular, too; why they have not been here two weeks yet, and her words are quoted, her wardrobe patterned after and her very manners imitated.'

'You are rather extravagant over them, my dear.'

'Wait till you see them mother for I mean to make him take his sister to see me. It will give us eclat to be intimate with them, their being with Astors they went immediately into society,' replied Anne.

Just then the bell rang.

'It is Mr. Lynde. How do I look mamma?' said Anne in a flutter of excitement.

'Charming my pet!' said her mother, fondly. 'There is no fear but you can make a good impression if you like.'

'If he does not happen to see our country cousin; he is so fastidious and genteel,' replied Anne.

Just then the bell rang a second peal

'Oh I am afraid that is Roland and Kate. What if they have brought her with them, and should take her into the parlor? There would have to be an introduction, and I should be so mortified. I know just how it would be,' she said anxiously looking over the banisters into the hall below (they were up in her mother' room).

'I will go down and take them in the back parlor if it be they,' said her mother.

But before she could reach the hall, the party she dreaded passed into the parlor.

Anne had followed close to her mother, and her mortification could hardly be concealed as she went into the parlor and saw the third party among them. She greeted them affectionately, after speaking to Mr. Lynde, and would have been very, glad to see them home again, were it not for their most unwelcome companion. She hastily introduced Roland and Kate to Mr. Lynde without noticing Milly, or giving them time to bring her forward as a cousin before him. She thought she preceived a strange sparkle in their eyes, as they responded rather cordially to the introduction. But other thoughts soon drove it from her mind—Roland turned to introduce Milly. Alas! it must come sooner or later, avert it as long as she could.

'Come, Milly, speak to cousin Anne; she must have welcome for you too,' said Roland.

A faint 'Miss Fenton' came freezingly from Anne, accompanied by a cool nod.

Roland turned to give her an introduction to Lynde, too quickly for observation however.—Anne, who was staring at her in astonishment, thought she saw a scarcely preceptible smile play over the faces of both—a meaning smile—a something she could not fathom.

No wonder she stared. Milly looked worse than she had pictured her. Her hair, which was a sunny brown, was comed so low over her forehead and face that but little of the form was visible, and twisted in a ugly knot at the back; broad, red ribbon bows were fastened at each side over the ears while large, old fashioned gold hoops hung from them, almost larger than the little white ears themselves. A necklace of large gold beads, such as our grandmothers wore, was around her neck, and hung down loosely over a high necked dress, which fit her in no way, and ended too soon to hide a thick stout boot; very small it was; to be sure, that same little foot, with its stout covering. And she was pretty, Anne could not but own, with all her unbecoming attire and a strange winking incessantly, partially squinting; a small piece of black court plaster was on her nose, which Milly took occasion to tell them covered a 'bile,'

As soon after as convenience allowed, Mr. Lynde asked Anne for some music. Eager to oblige him, and direct his attention from her cousin, she complied. In the midst of a brilliant and difficult execution, a scream from Milly started them all, and Anne broke down entirely. They turned to see who was hurt. Milly had bitten her tongue cracking nuts with her teeth. She had them in her pocket. 'Don't stop, cousin Anne!' she exclaimed; 'that's nice.'

But her fingers refused their office, and Mr. Lynde, as he bent over her, whispered, 'Let your sister take your place, Miss Earnshaw; I want to speak with you.'

Under the pretext of asking her to accompany him to the opera, he had taken her out of her embarrassing position; hope revived in her heart all that was not lost with him. That he did not condemn her, because she had an ignorant 'country cousin.' She talked animatedly with him, until Milly opened her mouth to speak again, then she listened anxiously

'Cousin Roland, you must take me to the oppery,' too to-morrow night, 'cause you know I can't leave Pa long and I want to see everything fore I go back, so I can tell Deborah Smith all about it.'

'I will said Roland gravely, 'If Mr. Opera don't die or fail before that time.'

'Better take her to Barnum's,' said Anne,

'Does he keep greens?' said Milly. 'Old Mrs. Jones, out our way, says that she has got a brother called 'Barnum that keeps a green grocery.

'You must find him,' said 'Anne; 'I shouldn't wonder if there was a nice chance for a bargain for you.'

'Father told me not to make a bargain with any of the city beaux,' said Milly, innocently. 'He said one of our country chaps was worth a half dozen of your city fops,' and Milly squinted critically at Lynde. 'Cousin Kate came mighty nigh catching one of our 'fellers' down there,' she continued.

Kate laughed and blushed a little, too, if the truth were told.

'What a pity she did not secure him; she is just the one to appreciate him,' said Anne, maliciously. 'Where was the trouble Kate that you lost him? Couldn't you milk? or because you were not a proficient in the art of butter making?'

'O, may be I havn't lost him yet!' said Kate, demurely.

'Ah! indeed! receive my congratulations, and ask me to the wedding.'

''Al! in good time,' said Roland; you may have to congratulate me, too, as I was not idle out there, some very nice girls there.'

'I think I shall start for the country soon,' replied Anne, tossing her curls coquetishly,

Shortly after Lynde made his adieus and departed, not before a certain movement passed between them that puzzled Anne for a moment, But thinking she must be mistaken, she thought no more of it.

'Come, Milly,' said Kate, 'you must be tired, and for fear you'll be homesick, you shall room with me.'

'How odd Kate is!' thought Anne, as she heard her. 'Roland,' said she, after they had left the room, 'what in the world possessed you to bring home that girl, after seeing how ignorant she is?'

'Oh, she will polish up under our care, wonderfully, by and by,' he added carelessly. 'You will like her better then, she is so affectionate,' he added. Then, as if some thought crossed his mind, he laughed, immoderately, Anne thought.

'I should laugh at her, too, if she mortified me less,' she said, sharply. 'All the polish you ever put on her will never make me forget the mortification of this night;' whereupon she gave him a detailed account of Mr. Lynde and his sister—their popularity and her hopes in regard to the former and wound up by saying: 'Now I am sure he will tell his sister about our country cousin and she will be prejudiced against me—I had so hoped to have her call here and be intimate.'

'So she shall, sis. I am so acquainted with Miss Lynde—saw her once when I was away from home It will be easy to renew the acquaintance by calling at Astors.'

'Oh! will you, Roll? Then I forgive you for bringing Milly here, only Kate must keep her out of my way in future. I don't want to risk the chance of Miss Lynde's seeing her.'

Again Roland laughed heartily, Anne thought, at the recollection of Milly's awkwardness.

'She shall not see her,' he said, at length. 'I have an interest in Miss Lynde myself.'

'I wish you could make her my sister,' said Anne. 'I will flatter you enough to think you could do it,' she added, looking at his handsome eyes smiling down into hers. She was very proud of that same noble brother

'Oh, no doubt,' he laughed, 'if she don't object—thats all the trouble.'

'Do be serious, Roll, for once.'

'Well, we,ll see,' said he, sobering only be kind to Milly, poor thing, it may be better for you to patronize her a little—it might be, possibly.' And he kissed her good night, and left her wondering at what he meant.

The New Call for Men.

The necessity of the call for more men is obvious. The October call was for 300,000, apportioned among all the States not in rebellion. No draft under it has been made. It was first ordered to take place January 4th but was postponed to March 1st and now to March 10th. In the meantime the re-enlistment of the old regiments began, and the War Department decided that each veteran in the service who re-enlisted, should be placed to the credit of the State and county to which he belonged. The effect of this order was to enable several States which were largely behind, to make up their quotas without producing many new recruits. The Government it is true, secured the service of the soldiers until the end of the war, but their wasted ranks were not thereby filled up. What is absolutely necessary is a large reinforcement of fresh men to swell the strength of the army when the campaign opens in the spring. Our veteran regiments, numbering 400 to 500 men, must return to the field 1,000 strong.

The rebels are ranking into their army by a merciless conscription, every male between fifteen and fifty-five who can hobble. They are putting forth every particle of remaining strength to meet the shock next spring. There is only one way to overcome this resistance, and that is by filling up our regiments to the maximum, so as to enable them to crush through and trample down all rebel opposition. One full regiment is as good as two half-full ones. The war has dragged on too long already The time has now come to make one tremendous effort and end it by overwhelming the enemy on every field. The number of veterans re-enlisting may reach 200,000, which, deducted from the October call for 300,000 men, would leave but 100.000 to be procured by recruiting, and consequently the army would be augmented only to that extent—less the wastage by death and discharges between the close of the last campaign and the opening of the next, which estimated at 40.000 would make our force but 60,000 stronger next spring than it was last fall. Hence the necessity of the enlargement of the October call to 500.000. Deduct from this 200,000 credited for the re-enlistments, and it leaves 300,000 new men to be procured to fill up the regiments in the field. And if the people want the war ended this coming summer the army must be reinforced to that extent. With vigor and good luck the job can be finished by the Fourth of July.

Illinois will not be seriously tasked to respond to her part of the enlarged call. She stands ahead of all the other States at this time. Her quota under the 300,000 call is nearly full. Some counties are behind, but others are ahead of their installment of men This too without counting a man of the re-enlisting veterans. Let the recruiting go on briskly for five weeks, and there will be no draft in Illinois. Our re-enlisting veterans will count on our share of the extra 200,000 men the President has called for, while in other States this source of men has already, in a great measure, been exhausted in making up their quotas under the October call. Such States will have to resort to drafting for more of less men. Much of the good fortune of Illinois in being so much better off than her neighbors is due to the foresight of Gov Yates and Adjutant General Fuller who were resolved to guard against accidents and contingencies, and consequently stimulated on all occasions the spirit for volunteering to the utmost. The consequence is, that now when the final call is made on the country for reinforcements to close out the rebellion, this State is ready to meet her part of the demand without resorting to military coercion for a single man. That is glory enough for one generation.—Chicago Tribune.

Shooting a Seducer.

The New York papers contain an account of a sad domestic tragedy in that city. An Englishman named Haines had been married fourteen years to a wife he appeared to love devotedly. Then a man a professed friend of the family, seduced the wife, who deserted her husband and lived for five years with her paramour. On Wednesday last the injured husband procured a pistol, told his wife's sister he was distracted, and should kill the seducer, and then went down to the house where the guilty pair lived. He told his wife that he could endure it no longer, but must kill Williams—the seducer—or be killed by him. Leaving the house he met Williams on the sidewalk, and after a word or two, shot him through the heart. On his examination at the inquest Haines made no defence, saying; 'I went to Williams to-day and demanded my wife; he made use of a very offensive remark, and made a motion with his hand; then I shot him.'

Haines was proved to be a quiet, hard-working man. The following touching letter to his guilty wife shows how deeply he had been wronged:

MY DEAR WIFE: This is the fourth letter I have sent to you, hoping still to win you back to lead a better life; I am still willing to forgive you, for I shall never more be happy in this world while things remain as they are. Sometimes I think of leaving the country entirely; then I take another turn of mind that I never had before you acted so. My mind wanders sometimes so that I scarcely know what I me doing. Dear wife, unless you comply with my wish, God only knows what will become of me. It is hard for me to bear, after living lawfully together for fourteen years, to be served so, and by a man that I have befriended, and thought he was a good man, and my friend. But I feel as though I can forgive all for you if you will only reform and lead a good life—Such a life as you are living always has a bitter ending, both in this and the world to come. Think, before it is to late, of what your are doing, and pray to God to forgive you, and you will be much happier. Dear wife, my mind feels composed this evening, more than it has for some time past, but God only knows how long it will remain so. I implore you to listen to reason from one that still loves you, and I always shall, as I always did. But for somecause or-other you abused my kindness. I am willing however, to forgive you. We will go out West in the Spring, and I will begin business for myself in a small rising town, and you can lead a new life where no one knows you, and live and die happily.

Your affectionate husband,
R. C, HAINES.

A SAD TRAGEDY.—A sad occurenc took place at Mattoon, Illinois, this P. M, A drunken soldier attempted to force a soldier named Stearns to take the oath of allegiance. He denied his authority, when, upon turning his back, he was shot dead. The soldier served two years in the rebel army, and enlisted to get the bounty. It is understood he will be immediately shot, Much excitement exists here over the occurrence, and it is feared more violence will take place.

The Galena Advertiser says there are seven hundred car loads of frieght in that city awaiting shipment on the Illinois Central railroad. The Advertiser hints that about two car loads per day are sent off, and intimates that it will take about one year, at that rate, to get rid of the whole lot.

A Change of Land Grant.

The Saint Paul Press, of the 12th inst., under the above heading, makes some remarks with regard to a joint resolution recently introduced into the United States Senate which seem to us entirely uncalled for in a paper which aspires to be the State organ, however well they might appear in the representative of some particular locality.

The resolution to which it refers is in substance, that 'the Land Grant Act to the Territory of Minnesota, of March 3rd, 1857, shall be construed to authorize the location of Railroads and branches without running or locating the same or either of them, to or by the way of, certain points named in the Land Grants.

It is a most judicious resolution and one that ought to have been incorporated in the original bill. Every one at all familiar with the Railroad history of our State is aware that our magnificent Land Grant was too long made the prey of town site speculators who, after squandering a million and a half of the public money, or, what is the same thing, running us in debt for that amount which we shall some day have to pay, and abandoned the roads to their fate; and now when bona fide Railroad men who have the means and are willing to build our roads, ask if they may be allowed to build them to and through the great business center of the State, the Press puts in a demurrer protesting that it has "heard no public demand on the part of Legislature, Railroad companies, or the public," which is all very true, no doubt, as far as the Railroad companies are concerned, as they are not in the habit of making public demands at least those of them who mean business.

We presume the Press could say, with equal truth that it has heard but little public protest against this resolution, and might add with equal justice, that there should be none; but that the railroad men from abroad who come to this State to build our roads, should be allowed to run their lines, within reasonable and proper limits of course, to such points as will not only accommodate the greatest amount of present traffic but by which they will be so located that rival lines will not in a short time, by seizing favorable localities from which they were precluded by legislative acts, cripple their business, depreciate their stock and absorb their dividends by ruinous competition.

The many wrecks strewn along the path of railway enterprises in this country caused solely by injudicious location in obedience to legislative acts admonish the Kings of the railway market to give heed to the great laws of trade in projecting their lines. The only wonder is that Railroad builders and capitalists will even accept a charter for, and invest their money in an enterprise of this kind which does not leave them free to select the very best route regardless of the claims of paper towns and prairie four corners. Something is often conceded to localities which furnish largely of material means to promote the building of a road, but if the great channels of business are deviated from, it is felt in the total or partial loss of dividends, and perhaps loss of stock to shareholders

If there are certain points in this State which railroad builders must strike to make sure against ruinous competition, by all means let them do so. But few will suffer in proportion to the many who will be benefitted. As to any such change interfering "seriously with the vested rights of many settlers," we think the Press is mistaken. The class, if any, which it will interfere with is the genus speculator, a species not in high repute or especially loved in this State; and even this class may be as much benefited as injured by the change.

We hope the resolution will pass Congress, and do not doubt but that the present Railroad companies so desire.

Escape of Union Prisoners.

Our latest telegrams informs us that nearly three hundred prisoners, mostly officers, had escaped from the Libby prison at Richmond.

Revoked.

Gen. Halleck, has telegraphed Gen. Pope that the order for the Second Minnesota Cavalry to report at New Orleans forthwith, has been revoked.

The President has commissioned Col C. C. Andrews, of the Third Regiment, as Brigadier General.

LIST OF UNCLAIMED VOLUNTEERS

The following is a list of names of Volunteers in Minnesota organizations, appearing on the muster rolls, not as yet claimed by any town. CONSCRIPTION.

The Enrollment Bill as it Passed the House—Full Synopsis and Important Amendments.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.

The enrollment bill has passed the House. It provides that the quota of each ward of a city, township, precinct or election district or county where the same is divided into wards, towns townships, precinct or election districts, shall be as nearly as possible in proportion to the number of men resident therein subject to draft taking into account as far as practicable the number which has been previously furnished therefrom, and in ascertaining and filling said quota there shall be taken account the number of men who have heretofore entered the naval service of the U. S and whose names are upon the enrollment lists and already returned to the office of the Provost Marshal General of the U S.

Any person enrolled under the provisions of the enrollment act, who may hereafter be enrolled, may furnish at any time previous to the draft an acceptable substitute who is not liable to draft, nor at the time in the military or naval service, and such person so furnishing a substitute shall be exempt from draft during the time for which such substitute shall have been accepted, but no private soldier musician nor non-commissioned officer being actually in the military service of the United States shall be procured or accepted as a substitute.

The Boards of Enrollment are to enroll all persons liable to draft under the provisions of this act and of the former act whose names shall have been omitted by the proper enrolling officers, all persons who shall arrive at the age of twenty years before the draft; all aliens who shall declare their intention to become citizens; all persons discharged from the military or naval service of the United States who have been in such service two years, during the present war and all persons who have been exempted under the provision of the second section of the act to which this act is a supplement but who are yet exempted by the provision of this act.

The board of enrollment shall release and discharge from the draft, all persons, who, between the time of enrollment and the draft, shall have arrived at the age of 45 years and strike the names of such persons from the enrollment.

Any person drafted into the military service of the United States, may, before the time fixed for his appearance for duty at the draft rendezvous, furnish an acceptable substitute subject to such rule and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War. If such substitute is not liable to draft the person furnishing him shall be exempt from draft during the time for which such substitute is not liable to draft not exceeding the time for which he is drafted and if such substitute is liable to draft the name of the person furnishing him shall be liable to draft in filling future quotas. If any drafted person shall hereafter pay money for the procuration of a substitute under the provision of this act, of which this is an amendment such payment of money shall operate only to relieve such persons from draft during the time for which the person was drafted, unless the names placed in the box be sooner exhausted in which case the name shall be returned to the wheel.

Members of religious denominations who shall by oath or affirmation declare that they are conscientiously opposed to the bearing of arms, and who are prohibited from doing so by the rules and articles of faith and practice of such religious denomination shall when drafted into the military service, be considered non-combatants, and shall be assigned by the Secretary of War to duty in the hospitals, or to the care of freedmen, or shall pay the sum of $300 to such persons as the Secretary of War shall designate to receive it, to be applied to the benefit of sick and wounded soldiers; provided that the person shall be entitled to the benefits of the provisions of this section, if his alleged conscientious scruples against bearing arms shall be supported by satisfactory evidence that his deportment has been uniformly consistent with such declaration

Any mariner or able seaman who shall be drafted shall have the right within eight days after the notification of such draft, to enlist in the naval service as a seaman. No pilot master, or any acting master, engineer or acting master's mate having an appointment as such and being actually in the naval service shall be subject to military draft, while holding such appointment.

The following persons are exempted and excepted from enrollment and draft, namely.

Such as are rejected as physically or mentally unfit for the service

All persons actually in the military or naval service of the United States at the time of the draft.

All persons who have served in the military or naval service two years during the present war, and have been honorably discharged therefrom,

No persons but such as are herein exempted shall be exempt.

The two classes heretofore provided for enrollment are consolidated.

In all cases where colored persons have been heretofore enlisted in the military service of the United States, all provisions of this act so far as the payment of bounty and compensation are provided shall be equally applicable, as well as those who may be here after recruited.

The bill also contains the section for enrolling all the able bodied males of African descent. &c., upon which a seperate vote was taken before the bill was passed.

Remarks of Senator Wilkinson on the Joint Resolution Giving $100 Bounty to the First Minnesota.

Mr. WILKINSON. I gave notice yesterday that I should to-day ask leave to introduce a joint resolution extending the benefits of the bounty granted by the act July 22, 1861, to certain soldiers who entered the service of the United States prior to May 3, 1861. I now ask leave to introduce the joint resolution, and I ask that it may be acted upon to-day without a reference.

Leave was granted to introduce the joint resolution

Mr. WILKINSON. I wish to state that the first Minnesota regiment was mustered into the service of the United States under the original proclamation of the President of April 15, 1861, for three months. It was mustered in on the 29th of April, 1861, a very short time after the proclamation. On the 3d of May, 1861, four days after the regiment was mustered into the service the President issued another proclamation calling out three hundred thousand troops for three years or during the war. The Secretary of War sent a dispatch to the Governor of Minnesota that he could not receive the regiment for so short a time, as the expense of transportation in bringing them here would be too great, but if the regiment would consent to serve for three years or during the war they would be ordered on to Washington. The regiment consented, every man of them, to go in under the proclamation of May 3, 1861, and they came here and have served in this army from that time to this.

The regiment has been in twenty-five battles—at the first Bull Run, at Conrades Ferry, at Ball's Bluff at Winchester, at West Point, at Fair Oaks, at Savage Station, at both battles of Malvern Hill, at Antietam, at South Mountain, at Gettysburg, at Haymarket, at Bristow Station, and in several smaller engagements.

The Solicitor of the War Department has made this decision—it is a very strange one—"that a volunteer soldier enlisted prior to date of the President's proclamation of May 3, 1861, and of General Order No. 15 May, 1861, is not entitled to bounty of $100 under act of July 22, 1861." &c. I understand that the Solicitor of the War Department decides it upon the principle that inasmuch as the regiment was mustered into service before the proclamation of May 3, 1861, the presumption is that it was not entitled to the bounty of $100 under the act of July 22, 1861.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will inform my colleague that the officer has reconsidered the decision.

Mr. WILKINSON. There are some reasons why the resolution should pass. This resolution which I have asked leave to introduce is intended to extend the benefits of this bounty to those soldiers; and there is no objection to it. I showed it to the Second Auditor this morning, who made some additions to it, and said that I was at liberty to say that he thought it ought to be passed.

It is a mere technical decision excluding this regiment from the benefits of the bounty. This regiment has lost already over two hundred men killed upon the battle field, five hundred more wounded, with twenty of its officers. The lieutenant colonel has has been eight times wounded. Only twelve men of this regiment have died of disease. Fifty of them have been mustered out of the service in order that they might receive comissions in other regiments. On the bloody battle-field of Gettysburg the first Minnesota volunteers lost two thirds of its officers and men and yet there has not been up to this day a solitary member of the regiment who has received his bounty of $100, under the provisions of the act of July 22, 1861.

It is very surprising that a decision excluding these brave and gallant men from the benefit of the bounty should ever have been made, but it is made a good deal upon the theory of the judge in our State who was applied to grant a writ of habes corpus to release a man from the penitentiary who had been sent there by the judgment of a justice of the peace. As our local laws required that the pteition for the writ should state upon what grounds the party was held in prison, it stated that he was held there by the decision and judgment of a justice of the peace. The judge refused to grant the writ, upon the ground that the constitution prohibited the justice from sentencing a man to the penitentiary, and therefore he could not be there; but the poor fellow was there; The Solicitor of the War Department decides that these troops cannot have served two years because they were mustered in at a time when there were no three years men called out; but many of the men have been killed in baltle, and the others are in the Army yet. I hope the resolution will pass without being refered to a committee.

The joint resolution [No. 20] excluded the benefits of the bounty granted by the act of July 22, 1861, to certain soldiers who entered the service of the United States prior to May 3, 1861, was read twice by its title.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let it be read at length.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, which proposes to extend the benefits of the act entitled "An act to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting the public property," approved July 22, 1861, so as to be applicable to and operate for the benefit of all volunteers who were mustered into the service of the United States prior to the date of the President's proclamation of May 3, 1863, if such volunteers have served the term prescriebd in the act under such enlistment necessary to entitle them to the bounty therein provided for. It also proposes to extend the provisions of the sixth section of that act to the widows and heirs of such as have been or may be killed or die in the service.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I must object to the passage of the resolution without its being refered to a committee. It may involve a very considerable expenditure of money, and we ought to have the report of a committee on the subject.

Mr. WILKINSON. Of course it will involve some expenditure

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then it should be examined by a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the joint resolution cannot be considered to-day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As it involves a question as to the construction of a law, I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That reference will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. Charles F. Browne, [Artemas Ward] was dangerously ill of typhoid fever at Salt Lake City on the 17th ult. A letter from that place of that date says:

"Yesterday his physician informed me that, though nothing could be said for two or three days with certainty, the chances were against his recovery. To day Dr. Hingston, his agent, informs me that he thinks him rather better, and hopes that the inflamation they dreaded is not to take place.

Lieut Taylor started for Fort Snelling yesterday morning. He took with him a number of recruits.

Lieut J. R. Howard, of Co E. Second Cavalry, passed through town Wednesday, on his way home. He is absent on a nine days furlough.

Mrs Waltz will give a select party at City Hall on next Monday evening, the 22d.

A petition is in circulation in this town recommending C. S. Duncombe, Esq., for a position as paymaster in the navy.

Minnesota lacks about three thousand men of having her quota full. The draft will undoubtedly take place.

SUPPER TO THE SOLDIERS.—Mr. Flowers supper to the Soldiers last evening was a very fine affair. A large number were present.

We understand that the arrangements for the soldiers supper, gotten up by our citizens generally, are completed, and that it will come off at City Hall on the 25th instant. The supper will be given at both hotels.

DONATION AT CRYSTAL LAKE.—The friends of Revs B. Y. Coffin and S. A. Chubbuck, gave them a Donation visit at the residence of W. R Robinson, Crystal Lake on Friday evening last. The attendance was quite large, and the proceeds amounted to over seventy dollars. The evening was spent very pleasantly.

THE Methodist Society at Garden City have been holding a protracted meeting at that place in Boynton's Hall. Considerable interest is manifested in the cause of religion there, and they have reason to believe that many souls will yet be converted.

TENDER OF SERVICES.—Col. Wm. Crooks, of the 6th has tendered the services of his Regiment to relieve the glorious First on the Potomac. Should his offer be accepted Minnesota will lose one of her best regiments from the frontier, and the Army of the Potomac will have no reason to complain. If the Colonel leaves the State who will command the expedition against the Indians? Echo answers, "who?"

We saw a man the other day who says he knows how to put seven men into six beds and have but one man in each bed. We understand the ever watchful proprietors of the Clifton and Mankato houses are negotiating for his services.

NOTICE.—I have received from the Adjutant General a list of unclaimed volunteers, in which are several from Blue Earth County. Town officers whose towns have not received their full credit are requested to call at my office and examine said list.

CHARLES A. CHAPMAN.
Auditor Blue Earth County.

Quite a number of our citizens are making arrangements to go to Idaho in the spring. Well it may be all right so far as the Ida goes, but as to our going out there to hoe, we just won't. It's hard enough hoing here.

A Puzzle.—Take three figure 1s, three 3s and three 7s, making nine figures in all. Select any five of them, and so arrange them that when added up the total will be 20. Six month's subscription to the lady who sends the answer.

CONTESTED ELECTION.—In the Nicollet County contested election for Co. Treasurer, Judge Branson has decided in favor of Casper Baberich, who received a majority of the votes cast. The town of Courtland had omitted to return the votes cast for Treasurer, and the certificate had been given to Mr. Magner.

We give up a portion of our local department this week in order to lay before our readers the list of unclaimed volunteers in the State. It will be of peculiar interest at this time, We notice in the list several names from this county.

BALL AT ST. PETER.—The Northwestern Sporting Club will give a grand ball on Washington's birthday, at the Stelzer House in St. Peters. Over two hundred invitations have been distributed.

We direct attention to the calls for a County Convention, and Town Caucus.

The Rebels.

The Chicago Tribune says the rebels are in such a fix, as our readers have perceived by the perusal of their leading papers, that it requires several columns to set forth their dilemma, to say nothing of any mode of relief from it. Their case seems to stand thus:

1. If they increase their army they cannot feed it.
2. Unless they increase their army they are whipped.
3. Unless the press speaks out their liberties are gone.
4. If the press speak out their Government will be gone.
5. Unless they draft the whole population they must surrender.
6. If they draft the whole population they must starve.
7. Unless they recover East Tennessee they can get no saltpetre.
8. If they undertake to recover East Tennessee, they will get more saltpetre than they want.
9. Unless they free the negroes they've nothing left to fight with.
10. If they free the negroes they've nothing left to fight for.
11. Ever since the rebellion begun negroes have been falling.
12. Nevertheless, their great fear now is, lest the negroes should rise.
13. Unless Jeff. Davis repudiates his present debts, he can't borrow from anybody.
14. If he repudiates, nobody will lend to him.
15. If he impresses food he turns the land into a desert.
16. Unless he impresses food he turns his men into deserters.
17. They can't succeed in the war until they have got the means of building railroads.
18. They can't get the means of building railroads.
19. If they fight they lose the day.
20. Unless they fight they lose every day.

That is what was meant two years ago, when we talked about getting them into the folds of the anaconda. Having tasted in the enjoyment of several vices for a long time, we will see how they feel in a vice.

To Soldiers and Postmasters.

Editors of newspapers throughout the United States will doubtless confer a favor on the soldier in the field, as well as their friends at home, by giving publicity to the following:

"AN ACT to amend the law prescribing the articles to be admitted into the mails of the United States.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled. That articles of clothing being manufactured of wool, cotton, or linen, and comprised in a package not exceeding two pounds in weight, addressed to any noncommissioned officer or private, serving in the armies of the United States, may be transmitted in the mails of the United States at the rate of eight cents, to be in all cases prepaid, for every four ounces, or any fraction thereof, subject to such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe.

"Approved, January 22 1864.

"POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, Jan' 25 1864.

"The foregoing law is published for the information of the public, and especially for the guidance of postmasters, and is thought to be so full and plain that no one can mistake its meaning. Postmasters will however bear in mind that packages of clothing entitled to pass in the mails, four ounces for eight cents—must be manufatured from wool, cotton, or linen, and not exceeding two pounds in weight, and must be addressed to a non-commissioned officer or private serving in the armies of the United States. Consequently a package addressed to a commissioned officer, or composed of other materials than above specified, such as boots, shoes, &c., if sent by mail, must be prepaid by stamps at letter rates, viz: three cents for every half ounce or fraction thereof.

"M BLAIR, Postmaster General."

MARRIED.

In Mankato, Feb. 16th at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. B. Y. Coffin, Capt. JOHN R. BEATTY, of Co. H. 2nd Regiment, and Miss LAURA A. daughter of Geo. Maxfield, all of this place.

DIED.

In Mankato, Feb. 17th of consumption JAMES H. BALLARD, brother of Columbus Ballard.

At Medo, Feb. 9th, EVA MAY, only daughter of Harriet A. and Samuel N. Goodwin, aged 4 years and 11 months.

The subject of this notice posessed one of those natures (so seldom found among children) that are universally beloved; and one whose heart seemed to live only, in an atmosphere of love and affection. She was of a quiet, and mild disposition; affectionately attached to home, her parents, and little brother, between whom there was a bond that increased in strength as they grew in years. Her disease was croup; and in her brief illness of four days, she was a great sufferer, yet she gave utterance to no word of complaint submitting quietly to all the means that were thought best for her recovery; until on the fifth morning of her sickness, the little sufferer went to Jesus.

"Lay her in the gentle earth,
Where the summer maketh mirth,
Where young violets have birth;
Where the lily bendeth.
Lay her there, the lonely one;
With the rose, for her funeral stone;
And for tears, such showers alone
As the rain of April lendeth.

From the midnight's quiet hour
Will come dews of holy power,
O'er the sweetest human flower
That was ever loved.
But she was too fair and dear,
For our troubled pathway here,
Heaven, that was her natural sphere,
Has its own removed."

TWENTY-SIXTH BIRTHDAY
OF THE
STAR PAPER OF AMERICA
JANUARY 1, 1864.
FOR THE COMING YEAR.

After more than a quarter of a century of uninterrupted success, The New York Mercury—standing first on the muster-roll of the Literary Press in this country—points proudly to its past career as a guarantee of new triumphs in the future.

Heretofore, it has eclipsed all rivalry: but it proposes to make the coming year memorable by eclipsing its own past history, and looming up before the world as the most marvelous specimen of a fascinating, brilliant, amusing, and comprehensive Literary Newspaper that has ever been published in either hemisphere.

THE GENIUS OF EUROPE

will be laid under contribution to give brilliancy to its columns, and side by side with original productions of the most popular romancists of the Old World, will be placed the chief d'œuvres of the most eminent story writers of the New.

Miss A. E. Braddon, Authoress of 'Aurora Floyd,' 'Lady Audell's Secret,' 'John Marchmont's Legacy,' etc., etc.' who has suddenly risen, like a star of the first magnitude in the literary horizon of Great Britain, has been specially engaged to supply the New York mercury from time to time with the wonderful creations of her genius, at a cost which no other weekly in America could venture to incur.

Among the multitude of distinguished writers and artists who have become familiar to the masses through the vast circulation of the Star Weekly of america, may be mentioned the following, all of whom are still upon its staff:

Dr. J. H. Robinson, Margret Blount Ned Buntline, Arthur M. Greiger, Grace Gardner, Felix O. C. Darley, Miss M. E. Bardden, Cousin May Carleton W. O. Eaton George Martial, Julia S. Ingraham, Edward Willett, Mary Chief, George Albany.

Scores of other distinguished literati, under various noms de plume, contribute to its columns, while its pictorial illustrations from the inimitable pencil of Felix O. C. Darley, Esq., the best draughtsman of the age.

The War, which has giving the coup de grace to so many pretentious publications, and half destroyed those that still survive, has added thousands to the circulation of The New York Mercury.

Its heart stirring short stories, its military historietts, its matchless serial romances, its racy burlesques, its genial wit and humor, its delicious gossip, its fairy tales for little folks, its rare poetry, its fresh and vigorous editorials, the infinite variety of its contents, and the large amount of reading matter that it comprises, render it welcome everywhere, and to all classes of society. Containing, as it does Forty Columns of closely printed matter, it may safely be pronounced the cheapest, as well as the best Literary Newspaper extant.

Three favorite writers, Doctor J. H. Robinson, Cousin May Carlton, and Ned Buntline, are now preparing three stories for the New York Mercury. One of these productions will be commenced in the Opening Number of the New Year. The authors being aware of this fact, are engaged in an emulative contest for precedence, and the result will unquestionably be that the most effective story ever penned by any of the three, will commence in the New Year's Number of the great Representative Weekly of the Western World.

The New York mercury is sold by all newsmen and periodical dealers in America. To subscribers, it is regularly mailed every Saturday morning, for $2 a year; three copies for $6; six copies for $9 eight copies for $12, with an extra copy, free, to the getter-up of the club. Six month's subscriptions received. Always write plainly the name of your Post Office, county and State. We take the notes of all solvent banks at par. Payment must invariably be made in advance.

MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS.—The special object and aim in the publication of this magazine, is to present Judicious, Reliable, and Practical information in all matters pertaining to ladies' and children's dress.

Information of the greatest possible importance to Milliners, Dress-makers, and every lady who wish to know the prevailing modes in New York and Paris.

To all enterprising ladies and industrious mothers, we shall endeavor to furnish many useful and practical suggestions in relation to the proper combination of colors, choosing materials, including cutting and making dresses, and children's clothes which of necessity must occupy a much larger portion of a woman's time, when no reliable authority is at hand to be consulted—suggestions which cannot fail to prove a source of much gratification, economy, personal refinement, and home comfort.

Do not fail to bear in mind that we furnish, in value, during the year, more than $3 in full-size patterns alone; while in plates, engravings, reliable information on fashions, more than can be secured in any or all the other fashion magazines put together, and yet the yearly subscriptions bring $1 with the extra fifty cents worth of full size patterns sent as a premium, makes the yearly subscription to cost really only fifty cents, independent of the Carte de Visite. Do not fail to subscribe for the Mirror, if you wish to secure it promptly as it is sent in advance to subscribers.

The Folding Case of the Family Machine is a piece of cunning workmanship of the most useful kind. It protects the machine when not in use, and when about to be operated may be opened as a spacious and substantial table to sustain the work.—While some of the Cases, made out of the choicest woods, are finished in the simplest and chastest manner possible, others are adorned and embellished in the most costly and superb manner.

It is absolutely necessary to see the Family Machine in operation, so as to judge of its great capacity and beauty.

CLIFTON HOUSE,

Mankato, Minnesota.

THE proprietor would announce to the traveling public that his house is now completed and furnished throughout in the best style and he is now prepared to accommodate all who may favor him with their patronage. From long experience in the hotel business in eastern cities he flatters himself that he understands the wants of the traveling public and will spare no pains to make the Clifton an agreeable stopping place. All who may be visiting Mankato, either for business or pleasure, especially those from the surrounding counties are invited to call and satisfy themselves. Attached to the premises are stables not excelled in the State either for capacity or convenience. The proprietor thankful for the very liberal patronage bestowed upon his house, would say to all stopping at the Clifton you will meet the same cordial and welcome reception as heretofore. Farmers sustain the Clifton House and by so doing promote your own interest. A word to the wise is sufficient.

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do; will He , Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., an are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood: and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Bodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dyspepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs: Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of billious colic, is immediately assurged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 22

THE SOLDIER'S WIFE.

BY DELLY ATHERTON.

Dead, on the battle field, alone!
My God, how can it be?
Why heed'st thou not the shivering moan
Of my strong agony?
Dead! and I loved him so!
He was my all—my life;
Oh, would the Southron's angry blow
Had stricken me, his wife!

His wife! Ah, never more his lips
Will bless me with that name.
Sealed in oblivion's black eclipse—
Where is their life and flame?
Yet, do I well for him to weep?
Did I not bid him go,
And say I would not have him sleep
While brave men met the foe?

Yet, oh, my heart! to live
And never see him more;
To know that earth no joy can give,
No pleasure holds in store!
O God, be thou my stay!
Guide thou my weary feet
O'er life's dark, rugged, toilsome way,
Till at thy throne we meet.

Select Miscellany.

From the Union Banner.

The Cousins from the Country.

BY MRS. RACHEL RICHELIEU.

She soon ceased speculating, and ran up stairs to catch her mother—the only one who perfectly agreed with her. As she passed the door of Kate's room, she heard them laughing merrily.

Let us take a peep into their room. What a transformation in Milly, she has on a soft, white wrapper, and a wealth of sunny brown curls fall over it; the squint and winking is gone and in their place is the merriest twinkle that ever shone in 'soft eyes so blue.' How beautiful she is; the sweetest of blushes is on her cheek, called there by Kate's flattery.

'Your toilet was bad enough I own said Kate in reply to a remark made previously it seemed; 'but if they married they could not destroy the beauty of this sweet face.'

'Oh, Cousin Katie! you'll spoil me by such flattery!' she exclaimed laughingly.

'I don't believe it is new to you,' replied Kate, according to my own observations these last three weeks.'

Poor Anne was ready to cry with vexation at one time; Mr. Lynde so fastidious too; what must he think of her relation?' And the girls laughed mysteriously.

'She may like him too well by and by,' said Kate; 'we must not masquerade too long.'

My noble brother who could help it?' murmured Milly.

'He seems made to be loved,' said Kate; and a tell-tale blush flushed her cheek for an instant. 'He may love her she is very lovely,' she said musingly.

'Not with so much counter attraction.' replied Milly, looking archly at Kate who flushed and said, 'who is the flatterer now Miss Fenton?'

'Did Fred Astor propose when you were in the conservatory with him?' said she saucily.

'He said more than I wished him to and if he feels it I am sorry,' said Milly, feelingly.

'He is a noble fellow, and you could not do better if you could love him.'

'Ah! I know—if I could 'love him' brother would be glad, for he thinks very highly of his friend—not but he will always have a welcome nook for me if I never marry—indeed, I think it would suit him better—but he supposes that I like the generality of femininity, must fulfil my destiny,' replied Milly.

The girls were standing with arms around each other at the window looking out upon the moonlight night when Kate said, softly 'I wish you and Roland would take a 'sweet feeling' for each other, and then you would always remain with us, perhaps.'

'Roland loves Miss Astor.' said Milly quietly, 'I have seen it since we have all been there together so much.'

Kate was near enough to feel that this calmness of Milly's was deceitful—that her heart beat a little quicker, and rejoiced at it. We will leave her reasons to develope themselves.

The next morning they met at the breakfast table and Milly wore a red and yellow, stripe print dress with a white apron, high at the throat, and long sleeves. Her hair was arranged as the evening before, only in the place of the 'twist,' a little mob cap with a profusion of parti-colored ribbons. Her aunt greeted her politely, but coldly, her uncle cordially and Anne not at all—scarcely deigned to look at her.

Roland said smilingly, 'do you feel any homesick yet, cousin?'

'I guess I shouldn't if I thought father wouldn't forget to feed my pigs, but he is so forgetful.'

Roland gravely told her he guessed they would think of it by hearing their noise.

'I never thought of that,' said Milly consoled.

Anne's nose went up as she shot an angry glance at Kate who was smiling mischievously.

'Cousin Ann I heard your 'beau' last night ask you to go to the opery to night, would you mind taking me along, too?'

'My name is Anne—and I do not think I shall go myself,' said that young lady sharply.

'Well you need not be so cross about it, cousin Anny; I wouldn't try to cut you out. What do they do there any way' she called after her as she left the room in disgust.

In a short time Kate and Milly retired to their room, and Anne did not see them again that day; she did not care to inquire if they were 'out' or 'in.' But what was her surprise that evening to see Roland, Kate and Miss Lynde enter the opposite box. Lynde had excused his sister to her on the plea of a previous engagement.

'How beautiful she is,' thought Anne as they mentioned them to come to their box I wonder where Roll got acquainted with her,' she speculated at the same time wondering where their 'country charge' could be. 'How sweetly she does dress! I am glad we are to be intimate,' she thought.

But her spirits received a check, soon. Mr. Lynde gave almost undivided attention to Kate so she turned her attention to cultivating the friendship of Miss Lynde. Before retiring that night she managed to see Kate and Roland alone.

'Roland you must get Milly home,' she said; 'I want to give our ball next week while Miss Lynde is in town. We have been arranging preliminaries to night for it.'

'What harm will she do?' he said. 'She would be the greatest attraction'

'Do you propose to make it a menagerie?' she said sharply. 'I would not have our set see her for anything and if you do not contrive to get her out of the way I will make mama go to father about her.'

'Well I'll see what can can be done with her,' said Roland.

'I bet my diamonds against yours she will be at the ball,' said Kate.

'I shall be safe in taking that wager, for if she is not removed there will be no ball untill she is,' said Anne confidently.

'You bet?' said Kate persistently.

'I will,' replied Anne.

'You hear Roland,' returned Kate.

'Yes and fear you will lose; I would not have Miss Lynde see her myself.'

'I am glad you have come to your senses,' replied Anne as they separated for the night. 'Tell her you are afraid the pigs will suffer,' she called after him.

Nothing was talked of for several days, but the ball and great preparation made and much time consumed deciding who should be asked. In the meantime Roland had contrived to get Milly away; by what method Anne did not care, so long as she had gone.

* * * * *

'Mr. Fredric Astor is very attentive to Miss Earnshaw to-night,' said one lady to another as she made room for her beside her.

'I have heard she was engaged to Mr. Wilde; she is very lovely and consequently has many admirers,' continued the speaker.

'She is in her true element to-night she is peculiarly adapted to managing these things,' said the other.

'Kate is also very beautiful and charming. I think she is more agreeable than Anne,' resumed the first speaker. 'Mr. Fenton evidently finds her so.'

'That one who stands beside her? why, that is Mr. Lynde, and yonder is his beautiful sister, resplendent in all her glory.'

'I was introduced this evening to him as Mr. Fenton.'

'You are both right.' said a voice behind them. They were introduced at first to puzzle their cousin, Miss Earnshaw, who had never seen them., The speaker was Virginia Astor.

Later that night, as Anne was passing Katie, she gaily said in a low tone, 'You look very handsome to night, my dear, in my diamonds.'

'Wait till the evening is over, we'll see who wins,' replied Kate.

'Ah! delay will not serve you; but we'll postpone the delivery of them until to-morrow,' returned Anne

'Meet me in the east window seat in ten minutes,' said Kate, as Anne moved off.

In a few minutes Kate and 'Miss Lynde' went out of the room. In about ten minutes they reentered and made their way to the secluded east window without observation. They found Anne awaiting them.

Can she believe her eyes! Milly is with Kate. Dress, beads, hair, ear-hoops—all the same! Yes, 'tis her and yet she looks strangely like Miss Lynde. Where is the squint, and ugly winking if it is Milly? No; it is Miss Lynde, yet—she sank into the window seat, vexed and puzzled by turns.

'Good' evening cousin Ann or—Anne I mean,' said the object of all this inquietude.

'For Heaven's sake who are you?' she made out to say.

'Come to our room and see,' said Kate.

Anne followed wondering 'if she was dreaming. 'How in the world came Milly there?' When they reached their room Milly took off the little mob cap, letting the beautiful curls of 'Miss Lynde' fall over her shoulders, fastening them back, with the same ornaments that young lady wore that evening—from off her beautiful forehead; next she took off the hideous dress, that Anne had not noticed came only down within a foot and a half of the bottom of the trailing robe of rosy satin worn beneath it. It was Miss Lynde! Yet as she spoke to Anne, the same peculiarity of look accompanied it.

'I found my pigs all well and came back for the ball,' she said laughing.

'Kate, what does this mean?' said Anne, imploringly

'It means I have now some splendid diamonds,' replied Kate

'My dear cousin, will you ever forgive us? We have been masquerading these last three weeks,' said Miss Lynde, or Fenton, as you choose, dear reader.

'I cannot tell what I have to forgive; I cannot understand it all,' said Anne.

'You called me cousin Miss Lynde; are you masquerading still? Please explain your meaning.'

Anne was beginning to get angry. Kate explained their ruse, and wound up by saying, 'Forgive us, dear Anne, and you may keep your diamonds,' and she could not help laughing in which they all joined.

'What a fool I have been not to see the truth; but I was so prejudiced against the 'country cousin' I hardly looked at her by daylight.'

'If you see the truth now I hope you will profit by it,' said a voice which made them all start. It was Roland, who had come in search of them, and had overheard a part of their conversation.

'O, you wretch!' exclaimed Anne, 'you have made me lose my diamonds, and you shall get me some more.'

'With pleasure, if your gracious highness will only pardon me, too,' said he, with mock humility.

'How is your 'bile' Milly? I see you have got your plaster off,' he said, slily, turning to her and giving her his arm to go to the rooms below, for Kate had suggested the propriety of returning. The sisters followed.

'Milly has been away to school these last two years, most of the time, Anne,' said Kate as they went down. She plays brilliantly.'

'I will frankly admit they are cousins to be proud of; and this is the secret of George, or Lynde Fenton's preference for my charming sister Kate,' replied Anne.

'He is the 'country beau' you recollect Milly once refered to.' she replied gayly; then more seriously added, 'we are engaged, Anne' with father's approval.'

'Why Katie,' said Anne, stopping in her astonishment, 'he said he was going to Cuba in the spring.'

'So he is, and I go with him, the Lord willing.'

'Has he really a plantion there, then?' asked Anne.

'He has more money than our father posesses, Anne, but I was not aware of it until after our engagement, father told me,' answered Kate gravely.

'Just like you, Kate,' returned Anne. 'And I have a secret for you too, my bird; you are not going to leave me, the oldest in a bad place. I have this night referred Fred Astor to pa.'

And it was true Fred was piqued at Milly's rejection, and proposed to Anne, whom he had always admired, and who would make him a graceful, elegant bride.

Later that night, or rather morning, after the guests were all dispersed, they learned that Roland and Milly would enter the matrimonial lists with them, and they would have a triple wedding, and all take their tour together. As they were to be married in early spring, on account of George's western business, we leave them all extremely busy planning their future; and none love the 'country cousins' better than Anne, except those who have a better right, to-wit: Roland and Kate.

A Beautiful Figure.

Life is beautiful compared to a fountain fed by a thousand streams, that perish if one be dried. It is a silver cord, twisted with a thousand strings that part asunder if one be broken. Frail and thoughtless mortals are surrounded by innumerable dangers which make it much more strange, that they escape so long than that they almost all perish suddenly at last. We are encompassed with accidents every day to crush the mouldering tenements we inhabit. The seeds of disease are planted in our constitutions by nature. The earth and atmosphere, whence we draw the breath of life, are impregnated with death. Health is made to operate its own destruction, the food that nourishes containing the elements of decay; the soul that animates it by vivifiing first, tends to wear it out by its own action; death lurk in ambush along the paths. Notwithstanding this is the example before our eyes, how little do we lay it at heart! We see our friends and neighbors die among us; but how seldom does it occur to our thoughts that our knell shall, prehaps give the next fruitless warning to the world.

One of the Democratic Swindles.

The copperheads are exhibiting a vast amount of virtuous indignation over the 'frauds and corruptions of the black Republican' administration as they call it; but they have not a word to say concerning the robberies by which the party in power during Buchanan's reign completely depleted the Treasury. One of the many of these swindles was related to me a day or two since. It appears that some three or four years since, Congress appropriated forty thousand dollars for the survey and establishment of a boundary-line between California and the Territories east of it. The law making the appropriation provided for a surveyor and two assistants one an astronomer—The surveyor to be paid $3,000 per annum and expenses. It also provided for so many men as engineers rod-men, axe-men &c. The surveyor was to be furnished with arms for his party from the U. S. arsenal and also with a guard of U. S. soldiers. But never did so unsuccessful and swindling an expedition set out on its duties. The result of it was that Mr. Mowry the surveyor spent seventy thousand dollars in the survey the result of which merely was that the initial point of the boundary line only was established somewhere on the banks of the Colorado river. There is one thing however which Mr. Mowry, or Lieutenant Mowry, (I believe he is a U. S. army officer) knew how to do and that was to spend money. In the first place he commenced by paying his assistant a salary of $4,000 (or 1,000 more than the law paid him) his astronomer the same, and his horde in camp followers in proportion. Instead of getting arms from the U. S. arsenal he purchased a lot of Burnside rifles in New York, and sent them under charge of two or three men, at $150 per month each, (traveling expenses, of course, paid) to California. When they got there, some twenty or twenty-five dollars each was paid for the repair of said rifles, and wherever they stopped on the road there was another bill of repairs. Such an expensive set of rifles was never heard of. The actual cost to the Government of each article was in the end over $500 Then Mr. Mowry hired a lot of men, paid them enormous wages and fed them like fighting cocks. Why the article of black pepper alone for the expedition was sufficient to supply an army of ten thousand men. Some of Mr. Mowery's party, and even him self drew rations in five or six different capacities. He drew his as surveyor Examiner at West Point, officer in the army and I don't know what besides. One item in the account is two hundred and fifty dollars for saying masses for the repose of the soul of one of the party, who died on the expedition. [He certainly needed them, or any other man on such an expedition under such an officer.] The strangest part of this particular post mortem item, however, is that the dead man signs the voucher for the masses. This may be accounted for perhaps, because the recipient of said masses was an Irishman, and no doubt 'riz right up in his bed,' when he saw the whiskey bottle being passed around at the 'wake.' Some two years since Mr. Mowry suddenly and mysteriously disappeared and the Government congratulated itself that it had got rid of a gentleman of such extremely expensive tastes and habits. Indeed it was stated that he deserted to the enemy and was somewhere in Santa Fe under some brother West Pointer, fighting the flag of his country. But such men cannot be got rid of and a short time since Mr. Mowry turns up in New York whence he writes a letter to the Department asking why his little account was not settled and coolly demanding that the balance of the same, amounting to the the snug little sum of fifteen thousand dollars be remitted to him by the next mail! In the meantime bills for subsistence furnished the expedition by various parties but for which vouchers appear all properly signed, &c., among the papers, are coming in. These persons claim that though they signed certain papers they never got any money the officer telling them it was neccessary to send the same to Washington first. The priest who said the masses however is not in this scrape. He got his money, as who would not on such a post obit as he was able to give. Mr. Mowry's account has been two years in process of adjustment, and I shrewdly guess it will be much longer before he gets that little balance which he claims. The Department brings him in debt to the Government some $40,000!

A son of Erin cautions the public against harboring or trusting his wife Peggy on his account, as he is not married to her.

Telegraph Anecdote.

The Trenton State Gazette publishes the following translation of a clever telegraphic anecdote in the Courier des Unis:.

Not long since a facetious operator of the telegraphic line between Washington and New York sent the following dispatch from Philadelphia to his colleague in the Imperial City. The whole affair is rather amusing:

'Philadelphia, January 1.—To Mr. M. Jones, New York. Please send me ten dollars in order to enable me to pay for my purchases.

MISS JULIA.'

The New York operator, not suspecting anything wrong, immediately responded:

'You have forgotten to send me the address of Mr. Jones.'

To this the Philadelphian replied:

'The author of the dispatch has not indicated any address. You can no doubt find it in the city directory.'

Here another message was transmited between the cities.

'I have already searched, and I find no less than five hundred Joneses in the directory: which is the Jones of Miss Julia?'

The Philadelphia operator, pushing the joke to extreme limits, telegraphed this to his contere:

'I cannot tell sir: you had better write out a number of copies, and send one to every Jones in New York, and charge each one the expense of the dispatch. By this means you will doubtless find the right Jones—the genuine Jones—the Jones of Miss Julia—the ten dollars Jones.'

This was accordingly done. A few days after the Philadelphia operator received a note from the President of the Telegraph company, couched in the following terms:

'SIR—I am informed that last Tuesday you transmitted a telegraphic dispatch, which you represented to have been addressed by a Miss Julia to one Mr. M. Jones You have caused your innocent and unsuspecting colleague at New York to send a copy of that dispatch to every Jones in the city. Each one of these unfortunate has been obliged to pay the cost of a telegram without knowing its meaning. In one instance, the husband being absent when the dispatch was left at his residence his wife opened it and read its contents. Imagine her mortification and indignation at this proof of her husband's infidelity in entertaining a correspondence with "Miss Julia." Here followed a "scene" between Mr. and Mrs Jones, which may lead to a plea for divorce I will hasten to make an explanation of witicism, which if repeated, may cause your removal.'

The last lines had the desired effect.

The Coming Crisis.

There seems to be a general feeling among all classes of men, that there will soon be a financial crash: that the present extraordinary high prices for everything, and the abundance of money which we now have will soon come to an end.

We like to see this feeling, and we only wish that more people would put in practice what they believe in theory, in regard to this matter, for then the day of panic would be put far from us. Our own "Green Backs" we love to look upon. We believe they are good mediums [not spiritual but temporal] of exchange. For many years we have needed a National currency, a currency that might be known of all men, and one in which the every day working men of the country might have implicit confidence.

We should like to see the people throughout the country take a firm stand against every thing in the shape of currency except Green Backs.

In order to do it every man must make it a rule to take nothing in the shape of paper money except Green Backs. The farmer, when he takes his produce to market, should take nothing in payment but legal tender notes. The merchants throughout the country should take the initatory step by refusing to take other than treasury notes issued by the Government. The banks have already hoarded up all the gold and silver, and are now gathering in all the Green Backs they can. If you don't want a panic—a crash—keep the Green Backs afloat—and let the bankers keep their trash.—Wilton News.

PERT.—We have some German friends up at Galena, who, in daily conversation, use the English language, but the mother teaches her children the same German prayers she used to repeat in her childhood, away back on the banks of the Rhine. One night, as little Ernest, a precocious chap of some four summers, was quietly going through his evening devotions, he suddenly electrified and astonished his pious mother, by exclaiming: "Ma, why do we always talk Yankee and pray German? Is God a Dutchman?"

Why is a minister like a locomotive? Because you have to look out for him when the bell rings.

A New way to get Subscriptions.

A negro was authorized to receive subscriptions for an African church in New York. He acordingly started on his arrand. The first man he called on was a dry goods merchant in the neighborhood of the City Hall who heard the negro's request to 'give something to the church' and then flinging the subscription book into the street proceeded to kick the darkey after it, exclaiming as he did so, 'Yes, I'll give you something take that!' After such treatment the colored man slowly picked up his hat and book, cooled his anger, and resolved to try again.' Accordingly he told the story to that merchant's neighbors and went through the street collecting so many odd dollars that before dark his book had forty names on it. Next morning he returned, and while engaged in relating the previous day's mishap a young man accosted him with a request to visit Mr.——'s store (the one from which he had been ejected) 'Oh, no you dosen't,' said the black man. 'I knows to much for dat. I aint gwine to be twict bat ar black white man, no how.' The clerk insisted, and finally the darkey consented. He was politely received by the merchant who immediately gave him a ten dollar greenback and after apologizing for the rough treatment of the day previous, requested the negro not to speak of it again in that neighborhood. Once more in the street the colored collector rolled up his eyes and exclaimed, 'Golly, dats too good to be lost fur de church! I's gwine to tell boff of dem stories, and see what I gits.' And so he did. With astonishing rapidity his book filled up until he had collected enough to pay off the indebtedness of his church.

The woman looked at him a moment and then retorted—

'Apples! anybody would know you are an Englishman. Them's huckleberries.'

In response to the above call, the unconditional Union men of Blue Earth County are hereby requested to elect delegates in the several towns to represent them in a County Convention to be held at Mankato, on Saturday, the 27th of Feb. at 2 o'clock P. P. F. ECKSTORM, Chairman of County Committee.

The News.

The story has been current in Washington that the President intends soon to make another call for troops, but there is good authority for denying it.

The Secretary of the Navy has decided to add another fleet to the national Squadrons. Advices from near Charleston report that some fifteen thousand troops have been dispatched by the rebels to Tallahassee, Florida, for the purpose of disputing the advance of our forces upon that place.

The National Union Convention for the purpose of nominating a President and Vice President of the United State is to meet at Baltimore, at the tick of noon, on the 7th of June next.

An Important Ruling.

Mr. Hall, U. S. Collector for this district, has just made the following ruling relative to speculating in State warrants, county orders, etc :

Office Collector Internal Revenue,
Mankato, Feb'y 19th, 1864.

It having been represented to me that parties not licensed as Brokers are dealing in Bounty orders, Warrants, &c., I wish to call the attention of all whom it may concern to the following ruling of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue : "County and town warrants are undoubted securities within the meaning of the law. Therefore a person whose business it is to purchase or sell those securities is liable to be assessed as a Broker.

'The amount of business done cannot be a satisfactory test in any case of a person's liability to license. In the case of the party who professes not to have bought warrants since the excise law was in operation, he has in effect been engaged in the sale of them, inasmuch as upon the receipt of funds from his correspondents they become the owners of an amount of the warrants in question which he in good faith must set aside and apply to the payment of their taxes. In many parts of the west there are persons who purchase town and county warrants, and use them in payment of taxes assessed upon lands of non-resident owners.'

This notice is inserted for the purpose of warning all persons who may render themselves liable to prosecution under the provisions of the excise act for violation of the law.

Report of the North-Western Sanitary Commission, Chicago.

We have received the Report of this patriotic and charitable organization for the last four months of the year 1863, which brings the published Reports of the Commission up to January, 1864. The report is very full, and gives all the information that can be desired. Its money receipts for these four months were $84,749,20. which includes the net profits of the North-Western Fair ; its expenditures for the same time were $47,801 85, of which $39,511-46 was for supplies to the hospitals. During this same time the Commission has recived 5,997 boxes from the various Aid Societies, and has shipded 12,298 boxes to Vicksburg, Helena, Memphis, Cario, Louisville, Libby Prison, Richmond Leavenworth, Kansas, Nashville, Western Virginia, Camp Butler, Springfield Chattanooga and Paducah, Ky. The whole number of boxes shipped by the Commission, up to January, 1864, is 28,618. All the items of these receipts and expenditures are given in detail, together with a list of the articles purchased, and the source from whence every box and every dollar has been received. The Soldiers' Home at Cario is under the care of the North-Western Commission, which during these four months has entertained 15,507 soldiers, and furnished them 51'582 meals.

The North-Western Commission invite the most rigid scrutiny into their method of business, their receipts and expenditure, and inform the public that their books and rooms are always open to investigation. They are confident that the economy, system and fidelity of their transactions will not suffer by comparison with those of any of our best business establishments. A Report is to be published hereafter every two months.

California Presidential Nomination

A dispatch from San Francisco states that the following resolution has passed the Senate of that State with but five dissenting votes, and the House of Assembly with only two dissenting votes :

Resolved, That the people still look to Abraham Lincoln as the instrument selected by Providence to lead their country through all its peril, and to restore it again to a place in which no element of discord shall be found ; and that we do most heartily favor his re-election.

Madelia Minn. Feb. 15, 1864.

MR. EDITOR.—We have living in this County, one P. D. Rutledge, Captain of Militia, County Surveyor "Railroad Contractor," &c &c, who procured the insertion in the Record of the 6th inst., an article, not written by himself, which I feel called upon to notice. In regard to the charge of disloyalty ; He has often publicly declared if he were to fight on either side in this war, it would be for the rebels. In the same manner he has expressed the wish that the Western States would "join the Confetheracy and let New England go to the Devil." He writes himself the only Democrat in the county." Probably you know—certainly, you ought to know that there are several men in this county, who are proud of that grand old oraganization, whose very name is the synonym of Loyalty, and so jealous of the honor of the old party that they would not by word or deed give occasion for that loyalty to be called in question. He charges, that myself and "another worthy," last summer personated Indians, in order to frighten women and children who fled in their night-dresses to the Fort Personally, I would scorn to notice such a charge even by a denial, but for the good name of our community allow me to say no such thing ever occured in the settlement. A word in regard to the election of County Surveyor, because thereto attaches a "gcak."

Pat had found somewhere a queer specimen of antiquity which he called a compass, the needle of which settled beautifully, but will vibrate only as he raps the "machine" with his knuckles. No one wanted the office so out of pure mischief we got Pats name up and he was elected!! I have stirred up the animal by a challenge to join us in enlisting, as he pledged himself to do when he was elected Captain ; but he is so little like a man, he is entitled to a woman's privilege of having the last word, so I will say no more. Au Revoir Captain our Regiment will soon be on the mov , and may no inconsiderate "Cooley" ever unearth you again, at least as long as you burrow in Watonwan County.

Gen. Hays, the Provost Marshall of New York, issued an order on Thursday directing his assistants and all recruiting officers to arrest all persons wearing the military uniform of the United States who are not entitled to wear it, and to strip from them their military buttons shoulder straps, stripes on trowsers, and other ornaments which are popularly supposed to indicate their connexion with the army.

While the bells were ringing at Portsmouth for the fall of Vicksburg a disloyal prisoner asked sneeringly of a Union man 'Where's the fire?' The latter responded, 'In the heart of every patriotic citizen, you cursed copperhead.'

Our Wedding Party.

On the night of the 12th inst., while seated quietly in my rude log house a gentle knock was heard at the door. On opening, two persons, who seemed to have confidence in, and be pleased with, each others society, entered. After the usual chit chat, said the one with the hardy, weather-beaten face, "we are come to get married." Not being willing to perform this day without the full knowledge of the parents, if they could be consulted, I sent a messenger for the young lady's widowed mother, who arrived in due time. All being right, the work was performed with little delay. My better-half, true to the dictates of friendship, tucked up her sleeves, pitched into the pan of flour, heated the oven, and by and by, our wedding party, consisting of seven, sat down to supper, enjoyed ourselves first rate, and the newly married couple and their friends left for home at 11 o'clock. Our young soldier, is bound not with such cords as the sons of the South bind the hands of our brave boys, but with such as the daughters of the North bind the affections of the heart, which can be broken only by the hand of death. There are some things in the history of the bridegroom which may not be uninteresting to your readers. His father, W. Sherman, was one of the first settlers in the town of Danville. His family consisted of two sons and one daughter, [Maria] whose constitution broke down in a short time. She died of consumption, and was laid under the green sod. Mr. S. sold his farm, and with his eldest son went to Austraiin. Isaac, the subject of the present sketch, then bu a youth, at the breaking out of the rebellion, enlisted in the 2nd Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, has spent most of his time in active service, was in six engagements, besides many skirmishes, and, last of all, was engaged in the battle of Missionary Ridge. One incident is worthy of special notice. After ascending the hill in wildcat fashion, being one of the first who gained the top, he received four ballet holes in his skin; his head was next visited by a ball which knocked off his cap and left the blood streaming down his face. In this state he continued during the action, until the shout of victory on the side of the Union was heard throughout the lines. After spending some time in the hospital he joined his Regiment, has re-enlisted, come home on furlough, and returns in a few days to join his companions in arms. He says he will never leave until the rebellion is finally put down. May he be preserved to return to the embraces of those he leaves behind, and can adopt the poets language,

"We took the field and with waving palms Returned in peace triumphant "

The Winona Republican says our grain dealers are taking advantage of the good condition of the ice by forwarding wheat to LaCrosse by sled navigation, as by this means they can save some three or four cents per bushel freight, instead of waiting the opening of navigation, when 25 cents per bushel will be exacted by the steamboat and railroad companies. If the present weather continues two weeks, nearly one-half of the wheat in store will have been removed in the above manner.

SAD ACCIDENT.—Mr. George Goodrich, of Brooklyn, was struck by a falling tree, on the 12th instant, while cutting railroad ties in the tamarack swamp, in Isanti County, which caused his death in twenty-five hours. Medical aid was procured, and every effort made to restore him, but in vain. He was a highly esteemed and Christian man ; a good husband and father. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his loss. He was 47 years old.

President-Making at Washington.

The Washington correspondent of the Springfield Republican writes to that paper, under date of Feburary 3, as follows:

President-making is a lively business in Washington just at he present. The friends of Mr. Lucoln say that he is sure of a re nomination—that nothing can hinder it. Mr. Chase's friends are equally sanguine of his success. The Democrats while secretly expecting to nominate McClellan occasionally throw out hints that they mean to take up Grant. The truth is that nothing is certain in the future. Lincoln may or may not be nominated. Mr. Chase still has an excellent prospect. Let the whole matter wait three or four months and we can all guess more accurately than at the present moment. Of one fact I feel certain—that the Democrats are going to run McClellan and that he will make a good run, too. It is not going to be as easy a matter to beat him as some people suppose. He is still a very popular man with a great class and it is very dangerous to take it for granted that he cannot be elected He pretends to favor the war and the Democrats can go to the people with him on a war and pro-slavery platform.

The Malden Murder.

Our readers recollect the mysterious murder, very recently, in broad daylight, of young Converse, Cashier, of the Malden Bank, and the robbery at the same time of the bank. A man by the name of Green, the Postmaster of Malden, was recently arrested for the crime. Late New York papers bring the following further particulars of the matter :

After the search of Green's person, he was conducted into an adjoining room, where he was informed that he had been followed and watched for some time.

*T*hereupon, without any unusual emotion, he confessed his guilt. He stated that on the day of the murder he visited the bank twice. The first time he found there a conductor, who left a pair of skates ; the next time was at half past eleven.

Immediately on entering, he went into the Director's room, and seeing no one, drew his pistol—a six-barreled Smith and Wessin revolver—placing the muzzle within a foot of young Converse's head and fired, the ball taking effect under or back of his ear. He instantly discharged a second barrel, the ball taking effect in Converse's temple, while his victim lay on the floor.

After the consummation of the deed he seized the bills in the drawer, about five thousand dollars, and went to his own office. He informed the persons present that a portion of the money was concealed in a piece of newspaper, in an old boot in the Post Office. Six hundred and fifteen dollars were found as he had directed.

He further stated that the balance was secreted under the flooring in the Volunteer Engine House, and on making search, three thousand four hundred dollars in Malden bills were found, making in all four thousand and sixty-nine dollars. This, with several sums paid by him accounts for the whole amount stolen from the bank.

He also stated that the pistol was in a drawer at his boarding house, and on going there it was found.

Green was brought to Boston and committed to the Toombs. The feelings of his wife on hearing of his arrest can better be imagined than described.

The Route to Idaho.

The Milwaukee papers are taking considerable interest in the proposed routes to the Idaho gold mines, and the chamber of commerce of that city have prepared a memorial to Congress asking for the establishment of a government road to Idaho, through theSouthern or Central portions of Minnesota. The Winona Republican, in speaking upon the memorial, has the following which is of interest:

According to their information and belief within the last few months, more than twenty-five millions of dollars in gold and silver have been mined in the territory nearly all of which still remains together with unestimated millions not yet reached, all unavailable for the want of convenient and safe means of ingress and outlet. They claim and we think with good reason, that the shortest and most feasible route to Idaho is thro' the central portion of this State—that is to say, the central portion of settled territory. The distance upon an air line from the western boundary of Minnesota to the eastern boundary of Idaho is less than five hundred miles; but as the memorial in question states, owing to the hostile character of the Indians through that unsettled and exposed section of country , the want of a proper wagon road and the protection of a line of military posts, the route suggested is unavailable, and emigration has to find its way by a circuitous line of travel through Utah, making the distance four times as great as that by the direct line through Minnesota Experience and observation have demonstrated that on this northern route there is an abundance of wood, water and grass; the climate is comparatively mild and a great deal of the soil is fertile and adapted to the highest cultivation. Such is the testimony of all intelligent travelers over the route indicated. Whether Congress will regard the request favorably is a matter of uncertainty, but we think that the reasons which can be set forth in behalf of the proposed route ought to be sufficient to insure its early opening by the government and a permanent military force to protect those who may from time to time pass over it. Even without government aid much can be done by means of the press and otherwise to disseminate correct information as to the feasibility of the Minnesota route, and thus direct the travel in this its natural channel, but with the assistance desired, a great deal more can be accomplished, and with greater efficiency.

As to the particular line of travel across this State that may be adopted, that is a matter which ought to be left to the choice and convenience of those most directly interested. The government route should commence at Fort Ridgley and thence proceed westward in the most direct line, The various towns in the eastern part of the State can and ought to settle the difference that may arise among themselves with reference to the benefits to be derived by entering into an honorable competition In case of Congressional action on the subject, this matter ought to be looked to, and thus all local contention can be avoided in securing the general object.

A Deserter Pardoned.

Columbus Cor. Cin. Gazette.

An interesting deserter case has come to my knowledge, illustrating, very happily, both the infamy of copperheadism and the leniency of the Government. On yesterday, a tall, athletic young man, dressed in butternut clothes, came into the Governor's office and announced himself a deserter from the 93d Ohio. He said he was willing to take the consequences of the crime after a statement of the facts. It appears that this soldier, whose name is Robert Johnson, was sent home on furlough early last season, the furlough expiring in September. While at home the copperheads got around him and filled his ears with the wildest and strangest stories, such as "this is an abolition war ;" the intention of the Administration to destroy the Democratic party, and not restore the Union," &c.

Through such influences, he was induced to refuse to return to his regiment. Subsequently, relating his story to a neighbor in Washington county, he was convinced of the error of his course. He formed the resolution of coming to Columbus and delivering himself up. Gov. Brough became deeply interested, and consigning Mr. Johnson to the care of the Provost Marshall, and asked for the man's pardon. He received in reply to day the following characteristic dispatch :

Washington, February 10.—Robert Johnson, mentioned by you, is hereby fully pardoned for any supposed desertion up to date.

A. LINCOLN.

It is needless to add that Mr. Johnson is a happy man, and will, doubtless, be hereafter a good soldier.

The LaCrosse Democrat of Wednesday evening, says:

We have had no mail here from the east since Saturday. Another terrible snow storm east has filled up the cuts full of snow, and the trains are baked in while men are hard at work shoveling them out. The 'oldest inhabitant' never saw such storms as have fallen upon the east this winter. Soon as an eastern mail comes in the Postmaster here sends that for St. Paul and the northwest on to its destination before the local mail is distributed; so our hyperborean friends should keep quiet.

The New Mosquito Fleet.

[From the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser]

The mosquito flotilla, which has been for some weeks preparing at this port to depart for New Orleans is now ready to sail, a great number of the vessels having been completed. Some of them however, will not be able to leave for some weeks. Three of the smaller ones which have been partially clad with iron have been finished at Jersey City; two of them turned over to Admiral Paulding for their armament, etc. As it has been stated in a Sunday paper that these vessels were to be part of a great expedition bound for a particular destination, it may not be amiss to say that the little steamers will be divided into several fleets on their arrival at New Orleans all to go in different directions, up such rivers and lagoons as are impassable to larger ships.

Quick Work in Coat-Making.

In 1811 Sir John Throckmorton, a Berkshire baronet, offered to lay a wager of a thousand guineas to the following effect : That at eight o'clock on a particular evening, he would sit down to dinner, in a well-woven, well-dyed, well-made suit, the wool of which formed the fleece on the sheep's back at five o'clock on that same morning. It was no wonder that, among a class of persons accustomed to betting, such a wager should eagerly be accepted, seeing that the achievement of the challenged result appeared all but impossible. Mr. Coxetter, of Greenham Mills, at Newbury, was intrusted with the work. At five o'clock in the morning, on the 28th of June, he caused two Southdown sheep to be shorn. The wool was washed, carded, stubbed, roved, spun and woven; the cloth was scoured, fulled, tented, raised, sheared, dyed and dressed; the tailor was at hand, and made up the finished cloth into garments; and at a quarter past six in the evening Sir John Throckmorton sat down to dinner at the head of his guests, in a complete damask-colored suit that had been thus made—winning the wager, with an hour and three quarters to spare. Of course every possible preparation was made beforehand; but still the achievement was sufficiently remarkable, and was long talked of with pride among the clothiers

Shortest Route to Idahoe.

Our near proximity to these golden fields of wealth makes it our duty, as citizens of a young and thriving State, endowed with so rich and generous a soil as we have here, especially in Southern Minnesota, to do all in our power to open communication direct between the mines and this section of country. Southern Minnesoto already overstocked with cattle, hogs, and grain, can supply the people of those mining regions with provisions cheaper than any other section of country in the world. The people who wil flock to those gold regions will, when once informed, take the shortest cheapest and best route. Fortunately it needs no labored or lengthy argument or great display of eloquence to convince the reasonable, that the great thoroughfare through Wisconsin and Southern Minnesota, emanating from Milwaukee, fed by the Northwestern Railroad coming in from Chicago at Minnesota Junction traversing the State of Wisconsin from East to West, tapping the Father of Waters at La Crosse, crossing into Minnesota at La Crescent, or taking a pleasant boat ride from La Crosse to the enterprising city of Winona, taking thence the well beaten wagon road directly west, coming by easy stages, or their own conveyance, or, if preferable, may be drawn by the steam horse to Saint Charles, which is as far as the railroad is now completed, thence to Mantorville—Wasioja—Rice Lake—Owatonna—Wilton in Waseca County, where our farmers will be glad to furnish, at low prices horses, horned cattle, beef, pork, flour, and provisions of all kinds in abundance—thence to Mankato on the Minnesota river. There take the route opened by the supply train that left Mankato last November, which leads to Fort Thompson on the Missouri river; thence up the Missouri to the Cheyenne, thence up the Cheyenne about one hundred miles to the fords—where there is plenty of timber—thence due west to the mountains.

This route is the direct one from the States to the gold fields of Idaho. The northern route takes you to Fort Abercrombie and north of the great bent of the Missouri river, many hundred miles out of the way, The southern route takes you by Omaha up the Platte river to Denver City, the northwest about the same distance out of a direct line.

THE DESTRUCTION OF COLT'S PISTOL FACTORY.—In the building destroyed Colt's pistol and revolving rifles were manufactured. In the buildings saved the United States rifles are manufactured, the company having a large contract from the government for the manufacture of these weapons. This portion of the works will continue in operation, giving employment to 800 men. The stock of pistols and rifles completed and in process of manufacture, which was destroyed by the fire, is valued at a million of dollars. The machinery destroyed cost more than half a million, and the whole loss is estimated at two millions. The total insurance on the property is $660,000, of which about sixty per cent. was on the property destroyed. Nearly 900 men are thrown out of employment. The fire broke out in the drying room about 8 a. m., in the attic, and spread with great rapidity. The origin of the fire is a mystery. One man was killed and another is still missing.

It began in the attic of the center wing, close by the floor leading to the immense upper loft of the factory. Others, who were employed in the room beneath, and who went directly up when the fire began, say that there were gun-stocks drying there, and that the fire could have been put out with a few pails of water, had they been at hand; but that the fire extended rapidly—Mr. Franham says, 'as fast as a man can walk'—and quickly got into the great upper room of the armory, where there were patterns, fancy stocks and various inflammable materials. Once there, the flames literally spread like wild fire. So quickly did the flames spread, that in a few minutes [less than six minutes according to the testimony of all who saw it,] the fire had run almost through the old or main armory, the wood-work burning as if it had been saturated with camphene.

CARIO, Feb. 20.—An officer from the Big Black river reports that just before reaching Jackson, a skirmish ensued between a part of Gen. Sherman's forces and a body of four or five thousand rebels, in which the enemy were defeated and forty of them captured.

Our forces passed through Jackson in two columns, the enemy retreating across Pearl river so precipitately that his pontoons, two pieces of artillery and a number of prisoners fell into our hands.

Our forces seized provisions of all kinds and swept on.

Great dissatisfaction is said to exist among the rebel troops.

War between Austria, Prussia and Denmark.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—The Times has the following telegraph:

LCHLESWIG, Feb. 5, (Friday) 6:30 P. M.—At three this afternoon the Austrians attacked the portion of Bestere, one English mile south of Schleswig. The Danish troops held their ground. Sharp fighting till dark.

The king of Denmark walked out to his outposts.

No casualities are known. The Danes lost one field piece.

LATER.

Firing continues. Another attack is expected to-morrow. The wounded are being brought in.

LONDON, Feb. 4.—The Times seems inclined to cast upon the parliment the task of deciding the policy of the cabinet. It says the future course of the British party rests with the House of Commons. All that a netural state may do will no doubt be sanctioned by parliment and public opinion.

The Times says the question whether state of war on the part of Austria and Prussia against Denmark, now definitely existing, is such as to imperil the ships of those nations now in ports of this country, if they should put to sea and meet with Danish cruisers. It has been a subject of anxious discussion.

Marshal Wrangel on the 13th of January summoned the Danes to evacuate Schleswig forthwith.

Gen. Demezea refused, whereupon the Russians passed the frontier and shots were exchanged without effect.

The Danes retreated after blowing up the Brough bridge. The Russians on the first inst. advanced to Gottor the Ekenfordt, establishing their headquarters at Gottorf. The Danish ships at Eckenfordt after exchanging shots with the Prussians, sailed away.

It is asserted that France and Russia would not join England. Napoleon had received the address of the Corps Legislatif, and in reply dwelt on the necessity of maintaining a staple government.

STEIL, Feb. 3.—In the engagement near Gossunde yesterday, the Danes maintained a heavy cannonade from their forts against the storming parties of German infantry. The loss of the latter is estimated at 100 men, among whom are several superior officers. The Danes continue the cannonade to-day. The Prussians have brought heavy artillery to the front. Boats are ready to transport troops over the Schlesi.

LONDON, Feb. 3.—The Evening Herald received the following telegram:

'RENDESBURGH, Feb. 3, 10:30 A. M.—Yesterday the Germans were repulsed four times and finally retreated, Thaw and rain set in."

A SAD AFFAIR—A MAN KILLS ANOTHER IN SELF DEFENCE—An unfortunate affair, resulting in the death of a man named John Gill, occurred in Medo township, Blue Earth County, on the 20th inst. The circumstances, as we gathered them from those who were present, are as follows:

Levi Mathews, an American, went on the Reservation in June last, having moved from Winona county, and made a claim of a quarter section on section twenty-three township one hundred and six, range twenty five. No one had ever made claim to this quarter, and he took possession of it under the pre-emption law, and put up a good dwelling and out houses. There are about thirty-five acres of good timber land on his claim.

In October, a Mr. Brown, who lives south of the Reserve, went to Mathews, and asked if he could get his boys boarded there while they were cutting timber on this land, he not knowing then but what it was vacant. After cutting a number of trees and splitting them into rails he learned that Mathews had a claim on it, and he went to him and proposed to settle the matter by leaving it to the town Supervisors, or any one of them. To this Mathews agreed. Accordingly they started in quest of the Board, and met S. E. Stebbins one of the Supervisors. As Brown also claimed the land, they both agreed to state the case to Stebbins, and be governed by his decision. If he said that Brown had the best right to the land Mathews was to leave it, and if the decision was in favor of Mathews, Brown agreed not to come on the land again. Mr. Stebbins decided that according to the laws by which they were governed at the Land Office Mathews could hold the land, and had the best right to it. Brown then took his team and went home, and has not been near it since.

It has been the practice of settlers living off the Reservation, for some time, to come on to the Reserve for their timber without ascertaining whether any one claimed it or not. On Saturday last, Mr. John Gill, and his son in law, were seen crossing the prairie in the direction of Mathews timber with two ox-teams. They stopped at Mr. Terwilligers, whose place is nearly half a mile from Mathews, about three-quarters of an hour, and then started for the woods. Mr. Terwilliger had agreed with Mathews to inform any one whom he might see going there for the purpose of cutting timber that he, (Mathews,) had a claim on it, and that they ought not to go there.

Mr. Mathews saw these teams going to his timber, and a short time after went and got five of his neighbors, Messrs. Nash, Gilmore, Stebbins, McCullough and Rogers to accompany him to the woods, so that he might have no difficulty with whoever might be there—he not knowing then who it was. He went there for the purpose of telling the parties that the timber belonged to him, and wished they would not take any of it away.

When they arrived on the spot they found Gill hard at work chopping down a tree. About ten rods off was his son-in-law, loading a log on his sled. He had got the log on and was fastening it with the chain. When they came up Mathews told the man that the timber belonged to him, and that he couldn't take it away. They went to work and rolled the log off the sled, and told the man to put on his chains and start his cattle off. He made no resistance, but went a few rods, stopped his team, and then followed the party who had gone to where Gill was at work. About this time two gentlemen from Danville, who were passing joined the crowd. And Mr. Mathews son, a lad about twelve years of age, who had been out hunting nearly all day, came up, unobserved, and stood a rod or two off. Mathews told Gill that he was chopping on his claim, and he wished he would leave and not take away any of the logs. Nash and Stebbins also told him that the timber was on Mathews claim, and he had no right to it. Gill first said that he had intenced to take the timber and pay the Government; but afterwards said that, as so much had been skinned off, he intended to take it any way, and he did not care how many men Mathews brought with him. Mathews asked what he was going to do with it. His answer was, that it was none of his business; and he should take the logs at all hazards. He kept on chopping until the log was cut off, then started with the ax in his hand, for his cattle that were standing a short distance away. Mathews and others told him that he could not take off the logs; and that he had better take his cattle home or they would have to do it for him. They had come there to protect each others claims. Gill paid no attention to this but drove his cattle round and so placed the sled that he could load on the log. He and Mathews were standing on the West side of the sled, the cattle heading toward the South, and the remainder of the party on the same side, a rod or two distant. None of the party were armed except Mathews son, who stood about two rods off, and had with him a light shot gun, with which he had been hunting squirrels. As Gill attempted to put the log on the sled, Mathews struck the off ox a light blow with a small whip he had in his hand. In an instant Gill turned upon him with his ax, and aimed a blow at him. Mathews turned suddenly to run, and the ground being slippery, he partially fell, and the blow from the ax which struck him on the back brought him nearly to the ground. Before he could get away, Gill struck him a second blow. Mathews started and ran indiscriminately back from the sled and snatched the gun from his son. Gill was close behind him, and had the ax raised to strike him the third time. Mathews had not time to turn and get the gun to his shoulder, before it went off, the contents hitting Gill, passing into his bowels. He fell to the ground and expired in a few minutes. They placed the body on the sled, and took it to Mr. Terwilligers, from thence to his home. Soon after, Mathews started for Mankato, where he arrived about dark the same evening, and gave himself into the hands of Sheriff Middlebrook. He then went to Attorney Pitcher, and requested that the matter be investigated.

Mathews was not acquainted with Gill, and does not remember that he ever saw him before.

No one supposed, while on their way to the timber, that there would be any difficulty, and that it would only be necessary to forbid Gill cutting logs on the claim

On Saturday night twelve men from Danville went to Mathews house and hung around until three o'clock in the morning, looking for him. They intended to take the law into their own hands, had they found him.

Onward to the Charge Again.

BY THAYER CHRISTIE.

Onward to the charge again,
Re-enlisted brothers go,
Wearied not, through Shiloh's rain
Fell around them, months ago.

Onward to the charge again,
Where the glorious banner waves,
Fearing naught, though former fields
Are strewed with fallen comrade's graves.

Onward to the charge again,
Men with loyal hearts, and true,
Freedom's birth right to regain,
From Treason's foul and dastard crew.

Onward to the charge again,
Ere the laurel wreathes grow pale,
Won—mid clouds of battle smoke,—
In Chickamauga's iron hail.

Onward, through the waning night,
Soon the morn of Peace will rise—
Like the star of Bethlehem—
In our dark and troubled skies.

Onward to the charge once more,
Till the world rings again,
Echoes—as in days of yore,
"On earth peace, good will to men."

TOWN CAUCUS.—The Republican Convention was held at City Hall on Wednesday February 24th for the purpose of electing delegates to attend the County Convention on Saturday, the 27th. E. P. Freeman was elected President of the meeting, and A. T. Lindholm, Secretary. It was moved and carried to elect the delegates unanimously.

T. T. Pierce, A. T. Lindholm, H. L. Gude, W. P. McKinney, John Loring, H. Hartman, J. N. Hall, were elected.

It was moved and carried that the number of delegates present be authorized to cast the vote for any delegate absent. The meeting then adjourned.

THAT PUZZLE.—We have received fifteen answers to the puzzle we gave out last week and the first correct one was handed in by Mrs. Libby Freund, of Judson. She will accordingly receive the Union. Here is another problem for solution:

A woman, named Million was lately married and by her marriage the bride became sister to her father and mother and and aunt to her brothers and sisters. The groom became son of a younger brother; his sister-in-law became his mother and became brother of four 'Million' children. What relation were said parties previous to their marriage?

A CHANGE OF CONTRACTORS.—C. M. Sly has sold his interest in the Blue Earth Stage line to A. D. Mason of Verona. Mr. Mason has been a resident of Faribault Co., for the last seven years, and is well known to the business community. While we are sorry to lose friend Sly, our acquaintance with the new proprietor assures us that the route will be well conducted, and that our merchants can entrust business with him confident that every errand will be promptly attended to.

"A SLIGHT COLD," COUGHS.—Few are aware of the importance of checking a Cough or "slight cold" in its first stage; that which in the beginning would yield to a mild remedy, if neglected soon attacks the lungs. Brown's Bronchial Troches give sure and almost immediate relief. Military Officers and Soldiers should have them, as they can be carried in the pocket, and taken as occasion requires.

JUSTICE COURT.—The examination of Levi Mathews for shooting John Gill, commenced Wednesday afternoon before P. K. Johnson. S. Finch and County Attorney, Pitcher appeared on behalf of the State, and David Wilcox and F. H. Waite for the defendant. The testimony in the main, agrees with our report given elsewhere, and we do not think will be sufficient to either convict or bind over the prisoner. The examination was not over when our paper went to press.

BOB OR NABOB?—The polite invitation extended to me to attend the party on Monday evening was duly received, for which I return my sincere thanks. It had been hinted to me by the female that none but wooden shoes and kitchen mechanics would be present, but after a careful examination I failed to see it. X. O. P

THE BALL.—Monday evening the 22d, the day we commemorate, was the scene of smiling faces and joyous hearts at City Hall, under the auspices of Mrs Walz. Forty-nine couple were present, just enough considering the capacity of the hall. The table was loaded with delicacies, and proved the hostess to the a caterer of great experience and taste.

TOWN TAX ELECTION.—The result of the election last Tuesday was as follows: For the bounty, 197; against the bounty, 26; blank, 1. This is highly creditable to our town, and shows that the tax-payers are determined to "stand by those who fight for the Union."

Drop-letters should be prepaid by weight—two cents for every half ounce—and if not fully prepaid, the unpaid postage will be charged at double rates and collected of the receiver. Letters deposited in the post office without stamps will not be delivered, but will be sent to the dead letter office,

MOVEMENT OF TROOPS.—Co. H. 2nd Cavalry Captain Davy, has been stationed at Kasota, and is now on the way there, Capt McKusick has furnished quarters for it in the large hotel building.

Co E. Capt. Slaughter, will take up their quarters in the hotel at West Mankato. A portion of them have already arrived.

NEW POST OFFICE.—The Postmaster General has re-established a Post Office by the name of Dover, in the County of Olmstead. It is on the route from Winona to Mankato between the offices of St. Charles and Greenfield, Cavlin Hitt is Postmaster,

THE State Convention meets in St. Paul next Wednesday. We wish the Central Committee were obliged to travel over the State for the next month, through the mud, to pay them for their absurd foolishness in calling the Convention at such an early day.

BROKE THROUGH.—Tuesday night, the Blue Earth Stage, with ten passengers on board, broke through the ice, while crossing the river at La Hillier. One or two of the passengers jumped into the water and were thoroughly baptized. No one injured.

OFF AGAIN.—The re-enlisted men and officers of the Second Regiment start for Fort Snelling to-morrow morning. Our best wishes go with them. They will leave for Chattanooga about the first of March.

WIND GRIST MILL.—The citizens of Blue Earth City are subscribing liberally towards building a wind Grist mill at that place. Three thousand dollars have already been subscribed.

AT HOME AGAIN.—O Ward is again at his post, after an absence of two months, as hale and hearty as ever. His Spring goods will soon be along, information that our lady readers will be glad to learn.

THE Soldiers Supper took place at City Hall last evening. As our paper went to press before the exercises came off, we cannot give a report until next week.

WE direct attention to the card of E. H. Smith & Co. Their banking house is now fitted up in good style, and they are prepared to transact a general banking business.

WE have been enjoying warm pleasant weather for a few days past. The roads are breaking up, and have become almost impassible. The prospect is good for an early opening of navigation.

WANTED.—A good smart servant girl is wanted to take charge of a small family. She can have her own price if she suits. Inquire at this office.

The mails are very irregular now. The river at St Peter is impassible with teams, and the streams on the Winona route are much swollen by the recent thaw.

THE Soldiers Home, alias the Clifton House, has been crowded to overflowing for the last week with the brave boys of our Minnesota Regiments.

THE quota of Martin county is one more than the number of men enrolled. Eighteen recruits enlisted from that county a few days ago.

O. D. NASH, a driver on the Blue Earth stage route, has gone to New York to enlist, where he gets a bounty of eight hundred dollars.

TO MYRTIE, SHELBY.—You forgot to send us your name. We cannot notice anonymous communications.

THE river at this point is rising quite rapidly. The water on the ice is nearly a foot deep.

THE Winona mail is now conveyed on horseback as far out as the Agency.

MARRIED.

A LARGE PETITION.—Senator Sumner recently had borne to his desk by two pages, a petition or the unconditional emancipation of all slaves, having on it some hundreds of thousands of names. Mr. Sumner referred to the petition as embodying the public sentiment of the country.

The Lewiston suspension bridge across the Niagara river was blown away by a gale of wind on Monday. This bridge was 1,045 feet in length, and was suspended by ten massive cables, which passed over stone towers, and were fastened to anchors imbedded in solid rock. It was considered a finished specimen of workmanship, and its perfect safety was never called in question. Its location, however, exposed it to the full sweep of the wind.

Some weeks since a modest weekly publication called 'The Round Table was unobstrusively announced in New York. Six Weeks in the Sioux Teepees,

By MRS. SARAH F. WAKEFIELD.

This is not a history of the Indian War, but a narrative of Mrs. Wakefield's sufferings while she was a captive in Little Crow's camp. She was on her way to Fort Ridgely, accompanied by Geo. H. Gleason, when they were met by the Indians. They shot him and dragged her and her two children into captivity.

This is the only narrative that has been published by any of the captives. It is for sale by Lewis & Frisbie at the low price of 25 cents.

CLIFTON HOUSE,

Mankato, Minnesota.

THE proprietor would announce to the traveling public that his house is now completed and furnished throughout in the best style and he is now prepared to accommodate all who may favor him with their patronage. From long experience in the hotel business in eastern cities he flatters himself that he understands the wants of the traveling public and will spare no pains to make the Clifton an agreeable stopping place. All who may be visiting Mankato, either for business or pleasure, especially those from the surrounding counties are invited to call and satisfy themselves. Attached to the premises are stables not excelled in the State either for capacity or convenience. The proprietor thankful for the very liberal patronage bestowed upon his house, would say to all stopping at the Clifton you will meet the same cordial and welcome reception as heretofore. SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do; will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood: and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Bodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparations contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element: no fiery exciitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health, within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs: Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of bilious colic, is immediately assurged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. in the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

Select Miscellany.

THE SOCIAL SERPENT.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

A lady whom we will call Mrs. Harding, touched with the destitute condition of a poor, sick widow, who had three small children, determined from an impulse of true humanity to awaken, if possible, in the minds of some friends and neighbors, an interest in her favor. She made a few calls, one morning, with this end in view, and was gratified to find that her appeal made a favorable impression. The first lady whom she saw, a Mrs. Miller, promised to select from her own and children's wardrobe a number of cast off garments for the widow, and to aid her in other respects, at the same time asking Mrs. Harding to call in on the next day, when she would be able to let her know what she could do.

Pleased with her reception, and encouraged to seek further aid for the widow, Mrs. Harding withdrew and took her way to the house of another acquaintance. Scarcely had she left, when a lady, named Little, dopped in to see Mrs. Miller. To her the latter said, soon after her entrance.

'I've been very much interested in the case of a poor widow this morning. She is sick, with three little children dependent on her, and destitute of almost everything. Mrs. Harding was telling me about it.'

'Mrs. Harding!' The visitor's countenance changed and she looked unuterable things. 'I wonder!' she added, in well assumed surprise, and then was silent.

'What's the matter with Mrs. Harding?' asked Mrs. Miller.

'I should think,' said Mrs. Little, 'she was in nice business, running around, gossiping about indigent widows, when some of her own relatives are so poor they can hardly keep soul and body together.'

'Is this really so?' asked Mrs. Miller.

'Certainly it is. I had it from my chamber-maid, whose sister is cook next door to where a cousin of Mrs. Harding's lives, and she says they are, one half of their time, she really believes, in a starving condition.'

'But does Mrs. Harding know of this?'

'She ought to know it, she goes there sometimes, I hear.'

'She didn't come merely to gossip about the poor widow,' said Mrs. Miller. 'Her errand was to obtain something to relieve her necessities.'

'Did you give her anything?' asked Mrs. Little.

'No; but I told her to call and see me to morrow, and I would have something for her.'

'Do you want to know my opinion of this matter?' said Mrs. Little, drawing herself up, and assuming a very important air.

'What is your opinion?'

'Why, that there is no poor widow in the case at all.'

'Mrs. Little!'

'You needn't look surprised. I'm just in earnest. I never had much faith in Mrs. Harding, at the best.'

'I am surprised. If there was no poor widow in the case, what did she want with charity?'

'She has poor relations of her own for whom, I suppose, she's ashamed to beg. So you see my meaning now?'

'You surely wrong her.'

'Don't believe a word of it. At any rate take my advice, and be the almoner of your own bounty. When Mrs. Harding comes again, ask the the name of this poor widow and where she lives. If she gives you a name and residence, go and see for yourself.'

'I will act on your suggestion,' said Mrs. Miller. 'Though I can hardly make up my mind to think so meanly of Mrs. Harding. still, from the impression your words produce, I deem it only prudent to be, as you term it, the almoner of my own bounty.'

The next lady upon whom Mrs. Harding called was a Mrs. Johns, and in her mind she succeeded in also awakening an interest for the poor widow.

'Call and see me to morrw,' said Mrs. Johns, 'and I will have something for you.'

Not long after Mrs. Harding's departure, Mrs. Little called, in her round of gossiping visits, and to her Mrs. Johns mentioned the case of the poor widow, that matter being for the time uppermost in her thoughts.

'Mrs. Harding's poor widow, I suppose'' said Mrs. Little, in a half-sneering, half-malicious tone of voice.

Mrs. Johns looked surprised, as a matter of course.

'What do you mean?' she asked.

'O, nothing much. Only I've heard of this destitute widow before.'

'You have?'

'Yes, and between you and me'—the voice of Mrs Little became low and confidential—'it's the opinion of Mrs Miller and myself, that there is no poor widow in the case.'

'Mrs. Little! You astonish me! No poor widow in the case! I can't understand this. Mrs. Harding was very clear in her statement. She described the widow's condition, and very much excited my sympathies. What object can she have in view?'

'Mrs. Miller and I think,' said the visitor, and with good reason, 'that this poor widow is only put forward for a cover.

'As a cover to what?'

'To some charities that she has reasons of her own for not wishing to make public.'

'Still in the dark. Speak out more plainly.'

'Plainly, then, Mrs. Johns, we have reasons for believing, Mrs. Miller and I, that she is begging for some of her own poor relations. Mrs. Miller is going to see if she can find the widow.'

'Indeed! That's another matter altogether. I promised to do something in the case, but I shall now decline. I couldn't have believed such a thing of Mrs. Harding! But so it is; you never know people until you find them out.'

'No, indeed, Mrs. Johns. You never spoke a truer word in your life, replied Mrs. Little, emphatically.

On the day following, after seeing the poor widow, ministering to some of her immediate wants and encouraging her to expect more substantial relief, Mrs. Harding callid as she had promised to do, on Mrs. Miller. A little to her surprise, that lady received her with unusual coldness; and yet, plainly, with an effort to seem friendly.

'You have called about the poor widow you spoke about yesterday?' said Mrs. Miller.

'Such was the object of my present visit.'

'What is her name?'

'Mrs. Aitken.'

'Where did you say she lived?

The residence was promptly given.

'I've been thinking,' said Mrs Miller, slightly coloring, and with some embarrassment, 'that I would call in and see the poor woman myself.'

'I wish you would,' was the earnest reply of Mrs. Harding. 'I am sure if you do so, all your sympathies will be excited in her favor.'

As Mrs. Harding said this, she arose, and with a manner that showed her to be hurt, as well as mortified, bade Mrs. Miller a formal good morning, and retired. Her next call was upon Mrs. Johns. Much to her surprise, her reception was quite as cold; in fact so cold, that she did not refer to the object of her visit, and Mrs. Johns let her go away without calling attention to it herself. So affected was she by the singular, and to her unaccountable change in the manner of these ladies, that Mrs Harding had no heart to call upon two others, who had promised to do something for the widow, but went home disappointed, and suffering from a troubled and depressed state of feelings.

So far as worldly goods were concerned, Mrs. Harding could not boast very large possession. She was herself a widow, and her income, while it sufficed, with economy, to supply the moderate wants of her family, left her but little for luxuries the gratification of taste, or the pleasures of benevolence. Quick to feel the wants of the needy, no instance of destitution came under her observation, that she did not make some effort towards procuring relief.

What now was to be done? She had excited the sick woman's hopes—had promised that her immediate wants, and those of her children, should be supplied From her own means, without great self denial, this could not be efected. True Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Johns had both promised to call upon the poor widow, and in person, administer relief. But Mrs. Harding did not place much reliance on this; something in the manner of both ladies impressed her with the idea their promise merely covered a wish to recede from their first benevolent intentions.

'Something must be done,' said she musingly. And then she sat herself earnestly to the work of devising ways and means. Where there is a will there is a way. No saying was ever truer than this.

It was perhaps a week later, that Mrs. Little called again upon Mrs. Miller.

'What of Mrs. Harding's poor widow?' said the former after some ill natured gossip about a natural friend.

'O, I declare! I've never thought of the woman since,' replied Mrs. Miller in a tone of self-condemnation 'And I promised Mrs. Harding that I would see her. I really blame my self.'

'No great harm done. I presume,' said Mrs. Little.

'I don't know that. I am hardly prepared to think as meanly of Mrs. Harding as you do, At any rate I'm going this day to redeem my promise.'

'What promise?'

'The promise I made Mrs. Harding that I would see the woman she spoke of, and relieve her, if in need.

'You'll have all your trouble for nothing.'

'No matter I'll clear my conscience and that is something. Come wont you go with me.'

Mrs. Little declined the invitation at first; but strongly urged by Mrs Miller finally consented. So the two ladies forthwith took their way towards the neighborhood in which Mrs. Harding said the needy woman lived. They were within a few doors of the house, which had been very minutely described by Mrs. Harding when they met Mrs. Johns,

'Ah!' said the latter, with animation,' just the person of all others I most wish to see. How could you Mrs. Miller, so greatly wrong Mrs. Harding?'

'Me wrong her Mrs. Johns? I don't understand you.' And Mrs. Miller looked considerably astonished.

'Mrs Little informed me that you had good reasons for believing all this story about a poor widow, to be a mere subterfuge, got up to cover some doings of her own, that Mrs. Harding was ashamed to bring to the light.'

'Mrs. Little! There was profound astonishment in the tones of Mrs. Miller and her eyes had in them such an indignant light as she fixed them upon her companion that the latter quailed under her gaze.

'Acting from this impression,' resumed Mrs. Johns, 'I declined placing at her disposal the means of relief promised; but, instead, told her that I would myself see the needy person for whom she asked aid. This I have, until now neglected to do; and this neglect or indifference I might rather call it, has arisen from a belief that there was no poor widow in the case. Wrong has been done Mrs. Miller, great wrong! how could you have imagined such baseness of Mrs. Harding?'

'And there is a poor widow in great need?' said Mrs. Miller now speaking calmly and with regained self-possession.

'There is a sick widow.', replied Mrs. Johns 'but not at present in great need. Mrs. Harding has supplied immediate wants.'

'Well Mrs. Little!' Mrs. Miller again turned her eyes searchingly upon her companion.

'I—I—thought so. It was my impression—I had good reason for—I—I'stammered Mrs. Little.

'It should have been enough for you to intercept the stream of benevolence in my case by your unfounded suggestions. Not content with this, however you must use my name in still further spreading your unjust suspicion, and actually make me author of charges again t a noble-minded woman, which had their origin in your own evil thoughts.'

'I will not hear such language!' said the offended Mrs. Little, indignantly; and turning with an angry toss of the head, she left the ladies to their own reflections.

'I am taught one good lesson from this circumstance,' said Mrs. Miller as they walked away; 'and that is, never to even seem to have my good opinion of another affected by the allegations and surmises of a social gossip. Such people always suppose the worst, and readily prevert the most unselfish actions into moral offence. The harm they do is incalculable.'

'And as the present case,' remarked Mrs. Johns, 'they make others responsible for their base suggestions. Had Mrs. Little not coupled your name with the implied charges against Mrs. Harding my mind would not have been poisoned against her.'

'While not a breath of suspicion ever crossed mine until Mrs. Little came in and wantonly intercepted the stream of benevolence about a flow forth to a needy, and I doubt not, most worthy object.'

'We have made of her an enemy. At least you have; for you spoke to her with smarting plainness,' said Mrs. Johns.

'Better the enmity of such then their friendship,' replied Mrs Miller 'Their words of detraction cannot harm so much as the poison of evil thoughts towards others which they ever seek to infuse. Your dearest friend is not safe from them if she be pure as an angel. Let her name but pass your lips and it is instantly breathed upon and the spotless surface grows dim.'

A SCOTCH WIDOW.—The clerk of a large parish not five miles from Bridgenorth Scotland, noticing a female crossing a churchyard in a widow's garb, with a watering can and bundle, had the curiosity to follow her, and he discovered her to be Mrs. Smith whose husband had not long been interred. 'Ah, Mrs. Smith what are you doing with your watering can?' 'Why Mr. Prince, I have begged a few hay seeds, which I have in a bundle, and am going to sow them upon my poor husband's grave, and have brought a little water with me to make them spring.' 'You have no occasion to do that, as the grass will soon grow upon it,' replied the clerk.

'Ah, Mr Prince, that may be; but do you not know my husband, who now lies here, made me promise him, on his deathbed, I would never marry again till the grass had grown over his grave; and having a good offer made me, I dinna wish to break my word, or be kept as I am.'

The Escape From Richmond.

The following particulars, additional to what we have received by telegraph, gives an exceedingly interesting account of the escape of Union officers from Richmond.

Seven or eight at first undertook to dig to towards a sewer emptying into a basin. They arranged a rope so as to climb up and down the chimney from any of the stories in which they were confined to the cellar, from which they began their tunnel. When the working party had got a considerable disatance under ground, it was found difficult to haul dirt back by hand. A spittoon which had been furnished officers in one of the rooms was made to serve the purpose of a cart. A string was attached to it and it was run in the tunnel, and drawn out and the dirt deposited under straw; but after hard work, and digging with finger nails, knives and chisels a number of feet, the working party found themselves stopped by piles driven in the ground at least a foot in diameter. After chipping for a long time the piles were severed and the tunnel commenced again and reached the sewer. Here an unexpected obstacle reached them. The stench from the sewer and the flow of filthy water were so great that one of the party fainted and was dragged out, and the project in that direction had to be abandoned. The failure was communicated to a few others, and then a party of seventeen concluded to tunnel under Carty street. On the opposite side of this street from the prison was a sort of carriage house or outhouse, and the project was to dig under or near the house. There was a high fence around it, and the guard was outside this fence.

The prisoners then commenced to dig at the other side of the chimney, and after a few handfuls of dirt had been removed found themselves stopped by a stone wall which proved afterwards; to be three feet thick With penknives they commenced operations upon the stone and mortar, and after nineteen nights hard work they again struck the earth, beyond the wall and pushed their work forward. On the 5th or 6th of February the working party supposed they had gone a sufficient distance and commenced to dig upward. When near the surface they heard the rebel guards talking above them, and discovered they some two or three feet yet outside the fence. The tunnel then continued some six or seven feet more, and when the working party supposed they were ready to emerge to daylight, others in the prison were informed. One hundred and nine prisoners decided to get away. Others refused, fearing the consequences if they were captured; and others yet, among whom was Gen. Neal Dow, declined to make the attempt because, as they said, they did not desire to have their Government back down from its enunciated policy of exchange.

About half-past 8 o'clock on the evening of the 9th the prisoners started out, Colonel Rose of New York leading the van. Before starting they had divided themselves into squads of two, three and four, and each squad was to take a diffierent route, and after they were out were to push for the Union lines as fast as possible. It was the understanding that the working party was to have an hour's start of other prisoners, and consequently the rope ladder in the cellar was drawn out.

Before the expiration of the hour, however, other prisoners became impatient, and were let down through the chimney successfully into the cellar. Col. W. P. Kendrick, 2d Tennessee; Capt. D. J. Jones. 1st Kentucky Cavalry; and Lieut. R. Y. Bradford, 2d West Tennessee, were elected to go out last, and from the window Col. K. could see the fugitives walk out of the gate at the other end of the enclosure of the caraiage house, and fearlessly move off. The aperture was so narrow but one man could get through at a time, and each squad carried with them provisions in a haversack.

At midnight a false alarm was created, and the prisoners made considerable noise in getting to their quarters. Providentially, however, the guard suspected nothing wrong, and in a few minutes the exodus again commenced. Col. Hendrick and his companions looked with some terpidation on the movements of the fugitives, as some of them, exercising but little discretion, moved boldly out on the inclosure into the glare of the gas light. Many of them were, however, in citizen's dress, and, as all rebel gaurds wore U. S. uniform, but little suspicion could be excited even if the fugitives had been escorted by the guard. Between one and two o'clock the lamps were extinguished in the streets, and then the exit was more safely accomplished. There were many officers who desired to leave that were so weak and feeble that they were dragged through the tunnel by main force, and carried to places of safety until such time as they would be able to move on their journey.

Once out all moved off in different directions, each squad looking out for itself, and choosing what it thought the safest and speediest way to some point in the National lines.

FIRES IN BEDROOMS.—Most people even many intelligent reformers, have the idea that to sleep in a cold room is good—essential to health. It is an error. It is better to have an open fire in your bedroom. The atmosphere is not only by this means constantly changed but with the fire you will keep the window open which will add greatly to the needed ventilation. But more than this, with the fire you will have fewer bedclothes over you, which is a gain as a large number of blankets not only interferes somewhat with the circulation and respiration but prevents the escape of those gases which the skin is constantly emitting Even furnace or stove heat is better with an open window, is better than a close cold room. Interchange with the external atmosphere depends upon the difference between the temperature of the air within and that without. But let us have the open fire. Let us go without silk broadcloths, carpets, and finery of all kinds, if necessary, that we may have this beautiful purifier and diffuser of joy in all our houses. In my own house I have ten open grates and find with coal at eleven dollars the expense is frightful and if it were in another department of housekeeping I feel I could not afford it; but in this I do not flinch so important do I deem the open fire.—Dr Lewis.

HOMELY HINTS FOR HUSBANDS.—If you fail in raising the wind abroad, that is no reason why you should kick up a breeze at home. No soil favors the cultivation of spare time so well as the domestic hearth. Beware of hiding the family bread-basket in your wine merchant's hamper Keep your passion flowers outside the walls of your homestead. If cultivated within doors, they are apt to scatter the seeds of dissension around the family table. Embrace a 'golden opportunity' with caution; like a fashionable friendship, it too often turns out a 'golden fleece.' If your wife pins a fresh rosebud in your button-hole, when you go forth to business in the morning be careful to present her with heartease on your return at night. Some men grow suddenly ashamed of an unassuming pot of fragrant mignonette if a wealthy friend happens to present them with a few flowers from his conservatory, and hide it away in some obscure corner, to make room for the brilliant but scentless exotics. Wives are not unfrequently treated after a similar fashion: and perhaps it would be well for their fastidious 'lords and masters' to jot down the following lines upon the tablets of their memories:

As the myrtle, whose perfume enriches the bower,
Is prized far beyond e'en the gaudiest flower;
So a wife who a household can skilfully rule,
Is a jewel of price to all men—save a fool

A REGIMENT OF WOODSAWYERS.—The Dayton Journal says: 'To the boys of Miami City across the river, belongs the credit of first conceiving and crying out the idea of organizing into companies for the purpose of sawing wood for soldiers' families in this vicinity. Two companies were formed there, and thereupon the boys on this side of the river began operations in good earnest; the four hundred cords of wood brought in here for the soldiers' families by the loyal people of Old Montgomery, on the 7th inst, giving them an extensive opening for operations.—Since last Monday, the 11th inst., all over the city the nights have resounded with the scratching of saws, the clatter of axes and the cheering of boys at their work of preparing wood for the families of soldiers in every part of the city. Our readers at a distance must understand that these youngsters are not half-grown men but boys from six to fifteen years of age. Not old enough to battle for their country, they are doing the next best thing they can—making those as comfortable as possible whom the soldiers in the field have left at home.'

DREAM OF A QUAKER LADY.—There is a beautiful story told of a pious old Quaker lady who was addicted to smoking tobacco. She had indulged in this habit until it had increased so much upon her that she not only smoked her pipe a large portion of the day, but frequently set up in her bed in the night. After one of these nocturnal entertainments, she fell asleep, and dreamed that she died and approached heaven. Meeting an angel, she asked if her name was written in the book of life. He disappeared, replied, upon returning, that he could not find it. 'Oh,' said she, in agony, 'it must be there. I have the assurance that it is there! Do look again!' The angel was moved to tears by her entreaties, and again left her to renew his search. After a long absence he came back, his face radient with joy, and exclaimed, 'we have found it; but it was so clouded with tobacco smoke we could hardly see it!' The woman, upon waking, immediately threw her pipe away, and never indulged in smoking again.

Trust Illustrated,

A child was once walking through a strange country led by his father's hand The living parent had pointed out to him, far away in the distance, the home to which they were going; and now the child's mind was troubled, for the road seemed to lead quite another way.—'Are you sure we are in the right path?' he would often ask.

But his fathers only answer was, 'Trust to me.'

Again the little questioner spoke: 'I cannot see how we shall ever get there by climbing this steep mountain side'

Still the reply was, 'Keep fast hold of my hand, and fear nothing.'

So the father and son went on their way until when the little feet were very weary, a sudden turn in the road showed them that they were at home.

Now it such a way that God often leads his children. They are like the little one who was so puzzled about the way. 'What will become of us?' they often ask. What will be to-morrow or next year? or twenty years to come?' Now such questions are like the child's, The proper answer is that which the father gave to him. 'Trust.' 'Do what is right now—to-day; so when to-morrow comes you will find that God is taking care of you and helping you still and in the end all will be well.'

A SCRAP-BOOK GIFT TO SICK SOLDIERS.—A lady in Leicester, Massachusetts, has sent to Governor Andrew a very interesting work of patient industry undertaken from patriotic motives. While attending in one of the hospitals upon her nephew who has since died from his wounds received in the war she heard a sick soldier there exclaim, 'Oh if I had a scrap-book such as my sister used to make how I should enjoy it!' Others of the soldiers expressed the same feeling. The remark sunk into the ladys heart and since her return home she has given all the time she could spare from housekeeping duties during eleven weeks to make a scrapbook of an old blank ledger; but she does not avail herself of newspaper cuttings and a pastepot like compilers of scrap-books generally. All of the extracts are laboriously copied out in a noble plain handwriting filling the large volume. The selection has been made with judicious reference to the object in view, and comprises a vast variety of styles and of subjects.

ONE HUNDRED LAWYERS.—A well known Irish lawyer having lost a case, which had been tried by three judges, who shall be nameless, one of whom was esteemed a very able lawyer, though the other two were indifferent, some of the lawyers were merry on the occasion.

'Well now,' said he, 'who could help it when there are a hundred judges on the bench?'

'A hundred,' said a bystander, 'there was but three.'

'By Saint Patrick,' said he 'there were one and two cyphers.'

THE WOMEN OF A NATION.—We do not hesitate to say that the women give to every nation a moral temperament which shows itself in its politics. A hundred times we have seen weak men show real public virtue, because they had by their sides women who supported them, not by advice as to particulars, but by fortifying their feelings of duty and by directing their ambition. More frequently we must confess we have observed the domestic influence gradually transforming a man naturally generous noble, and unselfish into a cowardly commonplace, place hunting self-seeker, thinking of public business only as a means of making himself comfortable—and this simply by contact with a well contact with a well-conducted women a faithful wife an excellent mother, but from whose mind the grand notion of public duty was entirely absorbed.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.—At the time of the Sunnyside disaster on the Mississippi, a mother and daughter were in the river together. A gentleman was asked by the mother to save her child. He replied—"I will try to save one of you, which?" The mother answered 'save my daughter.' At the risk of his own life, he plunged into the river and rescued the child. The mother was lost.

The Weekly Union.

United States Official Paper.

Mankato, Friday, March 4, 1864.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1864,
ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

A Change of Land Grant.

In looking over our exchanges, that were received some time ago, and were laid by for reading when we had leisure, we discovered in the St. Peter Tribune, of the 17th ult., an article on the above subject, that calls for some reply:

The Tribune, after copying an article from the St. Paul Press, of the 12th, entitled "Change of Land Grants," and our notice of the introduction of a joint resolution into the United States Senate by Senator Wilkinson on the same subject, launches out into a tirade of personal abuse of Mr. Wilkinson which, while it would be in very bad taste in a Democratic journal, is unpardonable in an organ of the Republican party. As a matter of taste it does not speak well for any community to tolerate such articles; and if the St. Peter people have no better arguments to offer in behalf of their interests, it would be the part of wisdom for them to offer none at all.

No one will expect us to reply to the gross personalities indulged in by the editor of that sheet, as they are but a rehash of articles which have heretofore appeared in the Record, of this place—a journal so lost to shame and so reckless of the interests of this community that it will publish anything to gratify the private malice of its editor.

This joint resolution is also referred to in the St. Peter Statesman of the same date, but its editor, having the instincts of a gentleman uses argument instead of slang.

So far as Mr. Wilkinson is concerned in the introduction of this resolution, he has not acted on his own motives, we believe, but at the suggestion, and by the request of the Railroad companies themselves who, doubtless, are desirous of removing every impediment in the way of securing the very best location. Years have passed since this land grant was made and the road projected. And now when the building of these roads is begun in earnest nothing is more natural, or reasonable either, for that matter, than that some changes should be made in the act donating the lands. As we understand it, this resolution leaves the Companies free to build their roads to the points first indicated, or, if their interests shall require, or will be promoted thereby, they can make any necessary deviation. Senator Wilkinson is not deserving of censure, as no deviation from the original point named in the act will be made unless there is a necessity therefor, to subserve the interests of the public, as well as that of the Railroad Companies.

The disengenuousness of the Tribune article is clearly manifest in the last paragraph, as no one with the least particle of sense, would suppose that the interests of St. Peter and Mankato are identical, and it is a great sacrifice of truth to make the assertion. If St Peter is the hub of the universe, we presume the Railroad company will feel bound to run their road to that place. But if it is just a little, say ten or twelve miles, one side of such a point, why, St. Peter is to be pitied, but the hub will not change.

The Tribune will permit us to say a word about another matter, and to inform it that it is putting on airs, after having been blessed with a veritable "accidental Governor" to talk about accidental Senators. The United States Senator from this District did not drop in at the tail end of a term as a consideration for "services rendered," but was elected by the constitnted authorities, after the most exciting canvass ever made in the Legislature, and over some of the ablest men in the State. By his official conduct and ability he has not only reflected credit upon the State he represents, but secured a position which no second or third rate man ever attains in the American Senate.

Parson Brownlow is reported to be dangerously ill at Knoxville, A letter says: "His recovery is a question of serious doubt. He says, however, that he is not going to give up the ghost until every leader swings, and the Union is restored. He is confined to his room, and much of the time to his bed, Winnebago Trust Lands.

Charles E. Mix, Acting Commissioner, has written a letter informing the public that the time for making payment upon bids submitted at the December sale and award on the 31st of that month will be extended until the 1st of April next. Persons availing themselves of this extension and making payment with Winnebago certificates of indebtedness will not, however, be allowed interest upon such certificates beyond the 29th day of January last.

Sherman's Expedition.

Deep anxiety is felt for the result and safety of Sherman's Expedition. The failure of the large Cavalry force that endeavored to effect a junction with him, is looked upon as a serious disaster, and likely to injure his prospects. At last accounts he was south of Meridian, on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, moving towards Mobile, according to information from Rebel sources.

A CARPENTER IN LUCK.—In Chicago a Washington street belle of some twenty-three summers, said to be an heiress of about $12,000 in value—left her mother's house and gave herself, and her fortune doubtless, to a journeyman carpenter who had been boarding with her parents, and against whose society her friends had constantly warned her. The happy couple are now enjoying high life at the Sherman. The bride is an only child. She has accomplished two things—married her lover and broken her mother's heart.

Michigan is going crazy on the oil question. The whole State seems to rest upon a fountain of oil. Another spring has turned up only eight miles from Detroit, and everybody in that city is going about with a kerosene lamp in his or her hand. Michigan now turns up her nose at all intruders, for she has "struck ile."

A DANGEROUS EXPERIMENT.—Yesterday a little boy aged about ten years attempted to get upon a truck wagon passing along Clark street, near Madison. He caught hold of one of the standards placed his foot upon the hub of the wheel and attempted to swing himself upon the bed of the truck—his foot slipped off the hub passing his legs through the spokes of the revolving wheel, and he was carried up between the truck bed and wheel. When extricated from his perilous position he was taken into the Homoeopathic Pharmacy where a physician upon examination, decided no bones were broken and that he was not seriously injured His father was sent for but when the little truant heard he was 'not hurt much,' he drew on his shoes and scampered for home without waiting the arrival of his father. A very fortunate escape from a hazardous experiment,—Chicago Tribune.

Gov. Seymour, Dean Richmond, Isaac Butts and August Belmont have been appointed delegates at large from the State of New York to the National Democratic Convention.

John C. Baum, the Cincinnati Post master, has been removed and Frederick John Mayer appointed in his place.

Senator Trumbull, of Illinois, has recently been afflicted by the loss of a son four years of age.

The letter of Franklin Pierce to Jeff. Davis, assuring him that blood would flow at the North, if the South should secede, has been lithographed and distributed throughout the State. Gen. Pierce is said to be the Democratic candidate for United States Senator.

The prospect now in Memphis is that at the ensuing elections the emancipation ticket will prevail over all opposition. The Union men are going to make an effort to accomplish that end at last,

A War Democratic Journal on McClellan

The Green Bay Advocate one of the leading Democratic journals in Wisconsin, owned and edited by ex-Lieutenant Governor Charles Robinson.—always staunch in its adherence to Democracy, and in partisan opposite to the present administration, although giving earnest and patriotic support to the war and repudiating the Democracy of all Wood-Vallandigham peace factions—expresses itself in this wise concerning George B. McClellan and the 'dead weight' which he has made himself upon his country in its prosecution of the war:

We have been reading the passages in the report of Geo. B McClellan. They are the passages which are selected by such papers as the New York World and others favorable to him to give him the very best show before American citizens. His letter of February 3d 1862 to Secretary Stanton setting forth plans of the Peninsular campaign as he would have had it is masterly in its conception, shows the military talent in its details, That is as it seems to us. Nevertheless the plan may have been faulty; it certainly was for good or for evil not carried out. Its projector has for good or for evil parted company with the great struggle for the Union and seems to have thrown himself with his heavy, dead weight, upon all efforts to go on with the war.

What matters it here in this time of peril whether McClellan or somebody else's plans and theories in 1862 were better? It is precisely of as much consequence as the question of Crouchy's fidelity at Waterloo. It is a matter with which history has to deal—not we here in the trenches resisting an assult upon the life of a nation.

Suppose McClellan to have been badly treated. Shall the earth and the sun stand still until he is attended to? Give him a court-martial or a committee of inquiry if he wants it shoot him or Stanton—whichever is found in fault—do any thing in reason he wants done, but let us go on meanwhile with more pressing and important matters.

Joe Hooker had as good a right to growl and grumble and humph himself up. Did he do it? Go and ask him down there in Tennessee good-naturedly smoking his cigar under the shadow of Lookout Mountain. John Pope as brave a fighting man as ever lived never had the hundredth part of the time the favor, the patient waiting that was given to McClellan to do something with the Army of the Potomac—did he fall back glum and cross and demand that nothing should be done until he was avenged? He came from the command of a great army to mere Indian border war as gaily as though it were a holiday excursion. Burnside did not cope with Longstreet at Fredricksburg and was summarily sent away; but sought another trial and gave him hard knocks at Knoxville; McDowell the earliest victim of ill-luck has been vainly urging ever since not the endorsment of his plans at Bull Run but a command to lead once more at the rebel army. Rosecrans the beloved of all, who was blown out after Chickamauga as you would blow out a penny candle reffered to the druggists instead of the Government about the opium question. Even Scott the greatest general living who was set aside gently but firmly takes his morning walks in the Fifth Avenue and if he dosen't encourage he dosen't discourage the attempts we are making to save this country.

Up to the advent of Meade every General who has had command of the Army of the Potomac has been relieved from it under circumstances which they probably did not regard as flattering. But of them all there been only one who has undertaken to inflict his wrongs—if they were wrongs—upon the country. That one is George B. McClellan. He asks the country to take notice that not only his military plans but his idea as to the policy of war are different from those which have been pursued. He publishes old letters to the President.

He charges Stanton, the existing Secretary of War, with having connived at his defeat and the destruction of the army. He advocates the election of a man to the Governorship of Pennsylvania who decides that the draft is unconstitutional. And he permits himself to be named as the Presidential candidate of the Fernando Woods the Vallandighams and the other dead weights hanging on this war. It is one of the fatalities, which seem to attend that class of politicians, that they are making a candidate of that kind. So long as they keep control of the Democratic party, so long wili it be beaten.

News Items.

Bill Harper, perhaps the most notorious bushwhacker and outlaw in West Virginia, was recently killed in Pendleton county. He fought desperately when surrounded, and did not give up his miserable life till preforated with fourteen bullets. He is reported to have murdered more men, stolen more horses, and destroyed more property than any other man in the State.

The Arkansas people are busily employed in their canvass, and a large majority will undoubtedly be polled for the anti-slavery feature of their new constitution,

Sudden Death of Austin B. Williams, a Well known Printer.

Mr. Austin B. Williams, a widely-known and highly respected printer, and for twelve years past employed in the New York Times establishment, died suddenly at the Hydropathic Institution of Dr. Trall & Co., in Laight-street, yesterday morning Feb. 21. Mr. Williams' personal appearance—[being perhaps the largest and heaviest man since the days of Mr. Holt, in this City, weighing some 420 pounds, and requiring no less than seventeen yards of broadcloth to complete his exterior cutfit]—made him an object of especial and peculiar interest to all associated with him. His humor and ready wit were of a superior order, and these, with his extraordinary porportion, made him a "host among his associates. Mr. P. T. Barnum repeatedly sought him for his popular resort as a natural curiosity, but his exceeding sensitive and peculiar character would never permit him to become an object of popular curiosity. He was extremely timid and bashful when in the presence of ladies, and would resort to any subterfuge to escape their company.

Still more notable characteristics of Mr. Williams may be found in the simple fact that he never knew the taste of ardent spirits nor tobacco never wore an overcoat, and eschewed the common vices of mankind to a degree seldom annalled. He was a native of Exter. N. H. and in the 31st year of his age. About a week since, while on his way home, he was seized with an attack of apoplexy and lingered until Sunday morning, when he passed away.—N. Y. Times, 21.

Artemus Ward's Fight with the Indians.

The Indians have got to be very daring of late, and an instance of their daring occurred only the day before yesterday. It was the Utes too who furnished them and not the Goshoots. The parties who have suffered were Artemus Ward the lecturer; Dr. Hingston his agent and associate and Mr. S. M. Irwing, the actor. Artemus Ward arrived here about a month ago and put up at the Salt Lake House. He was taken ill with the typhoid fever and nearly died; but got well again, and has been lecturing at the great Mormon theater here, where Irwin the actor has also been acting. The day before yesterday the three of them made up a party at the hotel and borrowing horses started to see the Great Salt Lake, which is twenty miles distant. They took the upper road at the foot of the Wasatch Mountain, about eighteen miles distant from here, they came suddenly upon a camp of Ute Indians, who first asked for meat and then demanded their horses. From Mr. Irwin who is the only one of those who have come back to the city, we learn the particulars of the affair. Dr. Hingston drew his revolver and shot down the Indian who tried to take his horse. Mr. Ward had no pistol with him, but was fortunate enough to have a bowie knife with which Irwin reports him to have fought valiantly. Irwin the third of the party was wounded in the shoulder by an arrow. He returned the compliment by shooting one Indian at least, and then made a desperate attempt to save his friends The attempt to get them off was hopeless and he had no alternative but to put spurs to his horse and flee. He thinks Artemus Ward is wounded. Both he and the doctor had no chance to escape, and are still in the hands of the Indians but no great fear is expressed in the city for their safety; because Woppakey the Chief of this tribe of Indians, is in the hands of Gen Connor as a prisoner at the camp, and while he is known to his tribe to be in peril, they will hardly dare to kill any white man. A message was sent to them by Gov Amos Reed yesterday morning to the effect that they must return the two gentlemen alive and unhurt by sunset, or Woppa-Key will be put to death and Gen. Connor will march his command down upon the Indian camp, and destroy every red-skin amongst them. A message has also been sent to the Utes by Brigham Young, the Mormon Chief, who has great influence over them. and who has made a kind of pet of Mr. Artemus Ward during his stay amongst us.—Missouri Democrat.

During the stay of Sherman's army at Big Black river, a party of refugees came in direct from Mobile among whom was a lady, who reports the inhabitants of that city living in fancied security, not dreaming that perhaps in a few hours the northern hordes will be thundering at their doors. There are some fifteen thousand troops in and about the city, many being old men and boys. Nothing is known of the reported revolt in Fort Morgan. There is quite a large Union element among the inhabitants, but of course they cannot express their sentiments The poorer classes who have no property to be confiscated, and who are suffering terribly, say boldy that they would rejoice to see the Yankees take the city.

Our Opinion of Democracy.

A Democrat who is square out for the Union in this revolution, deserves more credit than a Whig or a Republican, because the whole Rebellion is the work of Southern Democracy, and they have had the sympathy of Northern Democracy. We have entertained but one opinion of Democracy for a quarter of a century past and that opinion was formed under a firm conviction that the party intended the overthrow of this Government. In 1860 one Jordan Clark of Arkansas wrote to us stating that he had learned with exquisite pleasure, upon what he considered reliable authority, that we were about to join the great Demcoratic party, and asked for the date of our intended confirmation at the hands of their high priest. We gave the data for the date, as follows:

KNOXVILLE August 6, 1860.

Mr. Jordan Clark:—I have your letter of the 30th ult., and hasten to let you know the precise time when I expect to come out and formally announce that I have joined the Democratic party. When the sun shines at midnight and the moon at midday—when man forgets to be selfish, or Democrats lose their inclinations to steal—when nature stops her onward march to rest or all the water-courses in America flow up stream—when flowers lose their oder and trees shed no leaves—when birds talk and beasts of burden laugh—when damned spirits swap hell for heaven with the angels of light and pay them the boot in mean whiskey—when impossibilities are in fashion and no proposition is too absurd to be believed, you may credit the report that I have joined the Democrats!

I have joined the Democrats! Never so long as there are sects in churches—weeds in gardens—fleas in hog pens—dirt in victuals—disputes in families—wars with nations—water in the ocean—bad men in America, or base women in France! No Jordan Clark you may hope—you may congratulate—you may reason—you may sneer; but that cannot be. The thrones of the Old World—the court of the universe—the Governments of the world may all fall and crumble into ruin—the New World may commit the national suicide of dissolving the Union, but all this must occur before I join the Democracy.

I join the Democracy! Jordan Clark you know not what you say. When I join the Democracy the Pope of Rome will join the Methodist Church—when Jordan Clark of Arkansas is President of the Republic of Great Britian, by universal suffrage of a contented people—when Queen Victoria consents to be divorced from Prince Albert by a county court of Kansas—when Congress obliges by law James Buchanan to marry an European princess—when the Pope leases the Capitol at Washington for his residence—when Alexander of Russia and Napoleon of France are elected Senators in Congress from New Mexico—when good men cease to go to heaven and bad men to hell—when this world is turned upside down—when proof is afforded both clear and unquestionable that there is no God—when men turn to ants and ants to elephants, I will change my political faith and come out on the side of Democracy!

Supposing that this full and frank letter will enable you to fix upon the period when I will come out a full-grown Democrat and communicate the same to all whom it may concern in Arkansas.

I have the honor to be, etc.,
W. G. BROWNLOW.

Cox in a Box.

WASHINGTON, February 18th 1864.—There was quite an amusing passage at words, in the House yesterday between Mr. Samuel Cox, of Ohio, and Mr. Washburne, of Illinois, in which the former got very badly worsted. Sam started off on a very funny speech upon the subject of Miscegnation or the mingling of the races—a very disgusting theory, notwithstanding it has the endorsement of Wendell Philips, Theodore Tilton, Parker Pillsbury and others to whom I would respectfully suggest, that they show their faith by their works, and no longer advise other people to embrace the swarthy sons and daughters of Africa in the marital bond, until they have tried the experiment in their own families. Mr Cox has a perfect right to make fun of the doctrine of amalgamation. He can speak from experience of his party in the South, for the last fifty years, and pronounce it a failure. He knows what he is talking about when he says it will degrade the Anglo-Saxon race to mingle it with the African descenters.

In the course of his remarks, Mr. Cox "brought down" the Democratic side of the House several times. Fernando Wood was convulsed with laughter.— Alex. Long bordered on hysterics several times. Dan Voorhees "guffawed" till his face assumed the color of his hair, and his friends were strongly tempted to ring the fire bells. Mr. Malloroy gave several Falstaffian roars that shook the Capitol. Mr. Pendleton's bend up feelings tore the buttons from his vest in attempting to escape; and Judge Bless grinned his wig off two or three times. So far the laugh was all on one side, but pretty soon Sam sat down, and Mr. Washburne claimed the floor.

He only wanted permission to read an extract from the 'Buckeye Abroad, by S. S. Cox,' first remarking that this would probable be the last winter Samuel would spend in Washington as his district has undergone a change of heart since his election. He (Mr. Washburne) desired the House to hear what Mr. Cox had written in his book as to what he saw in Rome, while he was rambling among the gilded corridors of St. Peter's. Writing about the music which ravished the ear and the incense which titillated the nose, the author says, soon there arose in that chamber—what a shocking thing it would be here—a pure African delivering a sermon in Latin 'in the most graceful manner.'

Mr. Washburne read several extracts in which the buckeye Abroad deplores the existence of a prejudice against Africans in his native land, and wishes it could be removed. At Rome he regarded the darkey priest as an illustration to the world that the whole human race was bound by a common bond of brotherhood. I need not say that by this time the Democrats had changed their tune and the laughing was being done by the Republican side of the House. Poor Samuel felt badly.

A Sad Reverse to our Forces near Jacksonville, Florida.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.

The Times says that the steamship Fulton, from Port Royal on Wednesday last, arrived here at a late hour last night bringing information of a sad reverse to our expedition under Gen. Seymour in Florida.

We cannot give details, because after the Fulton had passed out into the bay, she was boarded by the Provost Marshal and Quartermaster with orders from Gilmore to deprive the passengers of all private letters in their possession.

To a passenger by the Fulton we are indebted for the following main facts of the battle on the afternoon of the 20th. Our troops under Gen. Seymour met the rebels 15,000 strong fifteen miles beyond Jacksonville, and eight miles beyond Landerson on the line of Jacksonville and Tallahassee Railroad. The battle was desperately fought during three hours and at night our forces overpowered by numbers retired to Landerson taking with them the greater part of the wounded. The Seventh Connecticut Seventh New Hampshire, Fortieth Massachusetts, fourth and 150th N. Y. and 8th New Jersey were engaged Col. Fridley of the U. S. regular army was left dead on the field. Colonel Reed a Hungarian officer was mortally wounded and all the officers of Hamilton's Battery were wounded The Captain being wounded in the arm. Lt Merrick was wounded in the foot. They are at Gen. Gilmore's head quarters at Hilton Head. Col. Guy Henry of the 40th Massachusetts had three horses shot under him but escaped unhurt.

The Cosmopolitan arrived at New York on Monday evening with 25 wounded Col. Read among them who was living when the Fulton left on Wednesday. The enemy's loss is not known. They captured five guns, It is supposed the troops were from Bragg's army. Gen. Hardee himself was on the field having been to Florida on a visit to his family and also to raise a second Florida brigade. Our loss is variously estimated from 500 to 1,300. Seventy-eight rebel prisoners were brought by the Fulton, We understand the Purser of the Fulton has a list of killed and wounded which he will show but will not allow it to be copied.

We notice a correspondent of the Hastings Conserver writing from Fort Snelling, states that the news of the Second Cavalry being ordered to New Orleans was received with almost universal approbation by the members of the regiment, and that the men, with but very few exception would gladly have gone South in preference to remaining in Minnesota, Such we have been reliably informed is not the case; that there are only a very few of the men who would be willing to go South, since they enlisted with the express understanding that they would not be required to leave the State: that the statement of the writer is without a shadow of truth, and that his motives of writing such can have been none other than mercenary, It is not at all probable that the men in the regiment the greater portion of whom are married men would rather go South than remain in the State where they would be near their families, nor do we think they betray any lack of patriotism in so expressing themselves.

Arrival of an Escaped Officer.

Washington, Feb. 29.

A letter from the army of the Potomac informs us that Lieut. Scudier, one of the officers who escaped from Libby prison with Col. Straight and party, came into our lines last night, having been on the way nineteen days. He intended proceeding by way of Gordonsville towards the Ohio river, thinking his chances of getting away in that direction better than the Peninsula, as he felt certain of being captured had he gone the latter way. After traveling 25 miles his knees failed him and he was forced to lie in a mudhole, as he termed it, for days.

A negro took care of him and became his companion, and he resumed his journey. At another time he was obliged to lie concealed three days. He finally reached the Rapidan on Saturday night and crossed, passing within a few paces of rebel pickets. Lieut. Scudar says he saw no troops near Richmond. No white male inhabitants on his route. Through the country he met only women, children and negroes. He represents Lee's army as pretty strong, but no signs of activity visible. He was captured near Rome, Ga., had been ten months in Libby Prison.

Emigration from Iowa to Idaho has increased so within a few weeks that the Governor has forbidden any one leaving the State until after the draft.

HOSTETTER'S Celebrated Stomach Bitters is one of the greatest strengthening preparations extant. It is especially adapted to those who are afflicted with the Fever and Ague, or any other disease arising from a disordered condition of the digestive organs. For the Fever and Ague there is perhaps no medicine in the world equal to it, as it enters, purifies and replenishes the blood, which is so important to bring about a healthy action in diseases of this nature. The Bitters are now among the most popular, and at the same time, valuable specifics in the medical world. In recommending it to the public, we are fully conscious of doing them a great service, knowing, as we do, their many excellent qualities, and sure and speedy action in all cases where the disease is caused by irregularity of the digestive organs A trial will suffice for the most skeptical ☞ See advertisement.

ABUSE OF EDITORIAL PRIVILEGES.—We were much amused while reading the report of the Mathews shooting affray, published in the Record of last week, and were forcibly reminded of the Fable of the wolf and lamb, that were drinking out of the same stream of water. The wolf was above the lamb, and loudly complained of him for having riled up the water so that he could not drink, while he, the wolf, was the one who had created all the disturbance.

The Record says our report is a "preverted statement of the facts." But the careful reader after perusing both reports, and hearing the testimony on the examination will hardly arrive at the same conclusion. In fact, not a single person has been found save this stickler for "editorial privileges," and his confrees, the friends of Mr. Gill, but what has admitted our report to be the only correct one published in accordance with the testimony given by the witnesses. Again, the fact that Mathews was discharged upon that testimony, gives additional weight to the truth of our report.

But, for a one-sided affair, a partial account that favors the prosecution in every respect, and is wilfully intended to forestall public opinion, give us the Record's account. Our report was carefully corrected after hearing the testimony up to the time of going to press, while the report of the Record was directly the opposite, and given without regard to truth. Take a single sentence for instance:

"Mathews, his boy carrying a loaded gun and several neighbors, repaired to the spot to order Gill off.

The idea which this would convey is that the act of murder was premeditated on the part of Mathews, and that the boy accompanied the party to the woods. The testimony does not show any such thing; but it does show that the boy had been hunting in the woods for hours previous, and knew nothing of it, until, being in the vicinity of where Gill was chopping and hearing loud talk, he came up unobserved, a few moments before the affair terminated. It may be however, that this stickler for "editorial privileges," and truthful reports, wished his readers to understand that Mathews' son aged about twelve years, was an uncommonly strong boy, and was able to carry 'a loaded gun and several neighbors."

The report of the Minneapolis shooting affair, recently published in the Press was similar to ours; given impartially, as will be developed when the examination comes off. If the one forestalled public opinion why not the other?

Our business is to publish a local paper, and the duty of every editor is to give full and correct information of every event that transpires in his county, so far as possible. His readers have a right to expect this and will blame him if he fails in that regard.

But the editor of the Record who affects to be so honorable and pure-minded that he sets himself up as a model for others to pattern after, knows as little about editorial courtesies and "editorial privileges," as he does about the Greek language. He should remember that "those who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.—Pursuant to call the County Convention met on Saturday last, and, in the absence of the chairman of the County Committee, was called to order by H. L. Gude.

T. T Peirce was elected chairman, and John N. Hall secretary.

The attendance was small, only the following delegates being present:

Mankato—H. L. Gude, T. T. Peirce, John Loring, W. P. McKenny, A. T. Lindholm, and J. N. Hall.

South Bend—Lars Lee.

Le Ray—John E. Walker.

The Convention proceeded to elect delegates to attend the State Convention at St Paul, with the following result:

John N. Hall, Lucius H. Dyer, Thomas Pugh, and J. R. Cleveland.

It was voted that the delegates be instructed to support men for delegates to the National Convention who will go for Abraham Lincoln.

It was also voted that the delegates present at the State Convention be empowered to cast the full vote of the county.

T. T. PEIRCE, Chairman.
JOHN N. HALL, Secretary.

THE SHOOTING AFFRAY.—Last week we were waited upon by some gentlemen from Danville, desiring information as to the person from whom we gained our report concerning the twelve men that visited the house of Mr. Mathews in the night, and stating that they did not go there with the intention of taking the law into their own hands. They say they were there with a constable, who had with him a warrant for Mathews arrest, and he, the constable had summoned these twelve men to assist in arresting this one man. Only three of them went into the house and assisted in the search. They were certainly there at an unseasonable hour of the night, yet we give them the benefit of their statement.

A COAL DISCOVERY.—We have received information from private parties and also from accounts in the Press of the discovery of an extensive vein of Coal on the Cottonwood, about fifty miles from Mankato. The examinations were made under the directions of Henry H. Eames a geoligist of note from the Pensylvania Coal mines, and who has been traveling over the State with this object in view for the past year. The party dug to the debth of eighty feet, and Mr. Eames gives a scale showing the soil and average debth of the coal vein. The vein is from five to seven feet deep, the first few inches being what is called lead ore, and is then followed by several feet of Cannel coal, and then again by a strata of stone coal,

A company has already been formed consisting of Messrs. Rice, Becker, Prince, Sibley and Steele, of St. Paul, Flandrau of St. Peter, and Behnke, Shilleck, and Rudolph, of New Ulm, who will commence operations immediately. About 10,000 acres of land have been filed upon by the Company and private citizens.

THANKS.—I am once more under the necessity of returning thanks for an invitation to attend the Soldier's Supper. It afforded me real pleasure to be there, as the company was a very select one, being made up principally of bobs and nabobs, wooden shoes and kitchen mechanics, the choice ones of "our set," a slight sprinkling of soldiers, and the august presence of the original A. Damphool. Invitations to "dance the fantastic toe," *hoov*ered around me like thunder-clouds in a stormy day. Having a preference for wooden shoes, I took pains to examine each one that gave me an invitation, to see whether they were those graceful pedal coverings, that I might not be lured into "dancing the fantastic toe" with any of the nabobs of "our set." I noticed several, who, unfortunately, did not wear wooden shoes, and so had to remain passive wall flowers. Au revoir. X. O. F.

LEAP YEAR BALL AT WINNEBAGO CITY—Under the auspices of the ladies of Winnebago, a very pleasant Leap Year party came off in Moulton Hall, at that place last Monday evening. It was a very pleasant affair—the best of the season. Twenty-nine couple were present and tripped "the light fantastic toe." The supper gotten up by "Mine Host" Kimball was excellent. The table was loaded with all the delicacies, and there was a feast for gormands or epicures. The ladies deserve great credit for their good management, and for the polite attentions shown their guests—the gentlemen. Long may they wave.

SUPPER TO THE VETERAN SOLDIERS.—According to the programme arranged, the supper gotten up by the citizens of Mankato, came off on Thursday evening, the 26ult. The meeting at City Hall was largely attended, and was presided over by Aaron Hilton, Esq. Judge Branson delivered a speech of welcome, and was followed by Captains Beatty and Clarke, and Charlie Mansfield, of the first Regiment. The occasion was a pleasant one, and was heartily entered into by all present.

WE clip the following from the Waupun Times. It will be of interest to many of our subscribers up country, and will remind them of the homes, and familiar faces left behind:

A donation visit will be made at the residence of J. M. Shepard, on the Fond du Lac road on Friday evening of this week, for the benefit of Rev. N Swift, of the M. E. Church. There will be a good supper and a good time. A general invitation is given.

FOUND DEAD.—Two soldiers, belonging to Co. M. Second Cavalry, were found dead by the roadside between Fort Ridgely and St. Peter. They were Germans, and were found some some eighty rods apart. A brother-in-law of one of them said he saw the bodies five days before, and when asked why he did not care for it, replied that he "had nothing to do with soldiers." The cause of their death is not known.

WE call attention to the card of Mrs. Levan and Miss Gail, artists, which will be found in another column. The specimens of their work that we have seen are very fine. They are doing a good business, and have more than they can attend to. Those wishing good photographs will do well to give them a call. Rooms opposite the Clifton House.

The citizens of St. Anthony gave a splendid entertainment to the boys of the Second Minnesota a few days ago. The festivities closed with a dance at the Winslow House.

THE town of Le Ray offered a bounty of one hundred and fifty dollars in greenbacks. We believe they succeeded in getting a sufficient number to fill their quota.

KILLING A CONSCRIPT.—On the 13th of February, 1863, a squad of Rebels soldiers were sent to conscript James McCollum, of Green County, Tennessee, a very respectable, industrous man, thirty or thirty-five years of age. They found him feeding his cattle. When he saw some of them he ran to the back of his barn; and without hailing or attempting to arrest him, one of them shot him through the neck, killing him instantly. His three little children, who saw it, ran to the house and told their mother; she came out wringing her hands in anguish, and screaming with terror and dimay.

The soldiers were sitting upon the fence. They laughed at her agony, and said they had only killed a damned Tory. The murdered man was highly esteemed by his neighbors, and was a firm Union man.

In April last, two rebels soldiers named Wood and Ingole went to the house of Mrs. Ruth Ann Rhea, living on the waters of Lick Creek, Green Co., to conscript her son. The old lady was partially deranged; she commanded the soldiers to leave her house, and raised a stick to strike one of them. He told her if she struck him he would run her through with his bayonet; she gave the blow, and he shot her through the breast.

THE SMALL POX STILL RAGES.—The scourge of our race, and handmaid of the rebellion, still rages in and around our town. It is all through the town, and has penetrated all classes of society. It is in the army hospitals; in private families, and is even said to be extended into the country. It occurs to us that the matter has been badly managed, though we may not be a judge. Small pox hospitals and pest-houses are in the midst of the town! Persons run up against cases on the streets. Negroes and others open the front doors of citizens, and rush in with the impudence of the devil. In short, every man goes where he pleases. We call for more rigid rule, civil and military, and we must have it, or we are to be overrun if not driven out o our houses.

DISAGREEABLE.—Thomson, of the Janesville Gazette, writes from Madison that a young married man who left his wife in Delavan, Walworth county, and enlisted in the Government service at an early day, was reported dead for a long time, and his friends have mourned for him as of that number whose graves ridge the accursed soil of the South. But he was neither dead nor sleeping, only a prisoner and was recently exchanged and ordered to report at this place, which he did one day this week.

Falling in with a friend here from his old home, he was naturally eager in his inquiries about his acquaintances, and especially as to the welfare of her whom he had so ardently loved through all the disappointments and hardships of a soldier's life. Imagine his surprise and bitter disappointment when informed that his wife, believing him dead, had married another! Here we drop the curtain, leaving it to the imagination of the reader to conceive of that tableaux which will soon take place when the brave and honored soldier confronts the faithless wife and the unfortunate man who calls himself her husband.

A SINGULAR EPISODE OF THE WAR.—Years ago, two New England brothers, named Moody, left their Eastern home to push their fortunes in the world of usefulness and business. Being men of education, one took to the bar, the other entered the pulpit. The lawyer settled in Mississippi, the pastor in Ohio. Both won distinction in their several profession, and both became prominent in their respective States. And, during all the years that passed, their mutually fraternal regard remained intimate and tender

The war of rebellion broke out. Both brothers took up arms—the lawyer in behalf of the rebellion, the pastor in behalf of the Union. They both received commissions—the lawyer as Captain Geo. Moody, and Chief of Artillery in Longstreet's army, the pastor as Col. Granville Moody, and commander of the 74th Ohio volunteers. At the battle of Stone river the two brothers met each other in battle array—the rebel Captain under Bragg and the Union Colonel under Rosecrans. Subsequently Colonel Moody resigned his commission and returned to the duties of the pastor. Captain Moody continued with Longstreet till he made his ill starred assault on Knoxville. There, being disabled, he was left at a farm house on the line of retreat, was taken prisoner, and sent to Camp Chase, of which his brother had been commandant. In the military prison attached to this camp he now lies tortured with inflammatory rheumatism, to which he has been subject, and which he has been subject, and which his exposure in the field rendered excrutiatingly acute. Thus situated, in suffering and a prisoner, the rebel Captain has sent for his brother, the Union Colonel, to come to his assistance. The true and loyal brother came, bringing with him such material aid in the form of "creature comforts," as well as with fraternal council, as would make his brother's situation comfortable. And Col. Moody is now engaged in measures for his erring brother's release on parole, and of taking him to his own house, so that he can minister to his comfort and restore him to health; and with a fair prospect of success.

Such is one of the singular incidents of this war of rebellion against the best government of earth.—Columbus (O.) Journal.

Collision Between Federal Officers—Bloody Fight Averted.

The New York Times, correspondent at Fortress Monroe gives the particulars of a serious collision which occurred between Col. Draper, of the 2d N. C. regiment, and Lieut. Col. Wead, of the 98th National Guard—originally, we believe, known as Bartlett's Naval Brigade—during the recent raid of Gen. Wild.

The affair came near resulting in a conflict of arms between the two Federal Regiments. Col. Draper, with his command, had been to Knott's Island on an expedition, from which he was recalled by a note informing him that Gen. Wilde was attacked at North-west Landing. He brought away with him the daughter of a guerrilla officer as a hostage for the safety of a colored soldier who had been taken prisoner by the enemy. On his march he had occasion to pass the headquarters of Lieut. Col. Wead at Pungo Bridge, and there halted to ascertain whether there was any further news of Gen. Wild. While there, the officer who had the young woman in charge was induced to take her into the house occupied by Lieut Col. Wead, who, as soon as she entered, declared his intention to detain her, as she had been captured within his lines.

Col. Draper ordered the lady to be removed to the carriage in which she had been brought from home, and his subordinate proceeded to obey. Wead drew a revolver, but Draper pushed him aside. Meanwhile the girl had been brought out, but a number of Wead's men had surrounded the house, and she was forcibly rescued from Draper's custody, and the Colonel himself was disarmed. He forthwith mounted his horse and galloped to his command, which was resting at some distance, and formed it into column of attack. Wead on his part caused his command to be formed in order of battle, and a desperate fight would have ensued but for the interposition of Colonel Cullen, of the 96th New York, and Dr. Mitchell, who succeeded in effecting a compromise by which the girl was taken by Colonel Draper to General Leslie and then to General Barnes, for their decision.

Gen. Butler subsequently investigated the circumstances, and issued an order severely censuring Lieut. Col. Wead, and sustaining the claim set up by Colonel Draper. Wead was compelled to apologize, and would have been dismissed from the service but for previous good conduct.

BY MRS. SARAH F. WAKEFIELD.

This is not a history of the Indian War, but a narrative of Mrs. Wakefield's sufferings while she was a captive in Little Crow's camp. She was on her way to Fort Ridgely, accompanied by Geo. H. This is the only narrative that has been published by any of the captives. It is for sale by Lewis & Frisbie at the low price of 25 cents.

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do; will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood; and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Boodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparations contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery exciitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvellous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not entrequently restored to health, within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs: Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of bilious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

AFTER THE BATTLE.

BY B. F. TAYLOR.

When furnace is in blast, the red mountain sparkles and plays like a fountain spring, and the rude surroundings brighten to the peak of the rough rafters with a strange beauty. When the fire is out, and the black and ragged masses of dull iron lie dead upon the ground with a dull and stubborn resistance who would ever dream that they ever leaped with life and light?

A battle and a furnace are alike. It is wonderful how dull natures brighten and glow castly in the glow of battle; how the sterling worth and wealth there are in them, shine out, and the common man stands transfigured, his heart in his hand and his foot in the realm of heroic grandner. But ah, when the fire goes out, and the scarred earth is heaped with riged clay, the black mouths of the guns speechless, mighty banners and no hands, the flags furled, the wild hurrah died away and all the splendid action of the charge vanished from the rugged field like a last flash of sunshine and you wander among the dull remainders, the dead embers of the intensest life and glow that swept your soul out only yesterday and drifted it on with a skirmish line, you begin to know what those words mean 'after the battle.'

It is days since great waves of gallant life dashed up against Mission Ridge and swept up and over it in surges; days since I tried to tell you how it looked; so many days that it is even now indurating into history, and yet, I feel like taking up the story just where I left it, on Wednesday at sunset, when our flags flapped like eagles' wings, and the wild cry of triumph quivered along the mountain. Standing on the edge of the field in the moonlight, calm as 'God's acre' stretches the rough valley that, but an hour before, jarred with the rush and whirl of battle.

From away beyond the Ridge, indeed three miles out to Chickamauga Station, and dropping shots from Sheridan's guns faintly punctuate the silence, but here, listen as you will you can hear no sound but the click of ambulance wheels slowly rolling in with their mangled burdens; no sigh, no groans, nothing but the sobbing lapse of the Tennessee.

I can never tell you with what a warm feeling of the heart I looked up and saw the Federal lines kindling like a new constellation upon Mission Ridge; they were as welcome as dawning day to the eyes that have watched the night out. The old baleful glare from the rebel camp and signal lights were quenched with something thicker than water, and Chattanooga was at peace.

It is strange that a battle almost always lies between two breaths of sleep; the dreamless slumber into which men fall upon its eve; the calm repose they sink in at its end, Night fairly held its breath above the camps the wing of silence was over them all. Then came Thursday morning bright and beautiful. You go out to the field, and you keep saying over and over 'after the battle—after the battle,' Men prone upon their faces in deaths deep abasement; here one his head pillowed upon his folded arms; there one his cheek pressed upon a stone as was Jacob's at Bethel; yonder one, his fingers stiffened round his musket. Now you pass where a butternut and a true blue have gone down together, the arm of the one flung over the other; where a young boy of fifteen lies face upward both hands clasped over his heart. The sun has touched the frost that whitened his hair and it hangs like tears fresh fallen upon his cheek where a lieutenant grasps a bush as if he died vainly feeling for a little hold upon earth and life; where a stained trail leads you to a shelter behind a rock and there a captain who had crept away out of sight and fallen asleep; where rebels and true hearts lie in short windrows, as if Death had began to harvest and had wearied of the work. And so through the valley and up the Ridge in every atitude lie the unburied dead; lie just as they fell in the glow of the battle. And those faces are not as you would think; hardly one distorted by passion; almost white and calm as Ben Adhams dream of peace many brightened with something like a smile; a few strangely beautiful.

Wounded ones that escape the moonlight search have lain silently waiting for morning, without murmur or complaint; glad they are alive; not grieved that they are wounded, for 'did we not take the Ridge?' they say; thus did the old soldiery spirit of one flash up like an expiring candle, and go out right there on the field as he spoke, he died with the last words on his lips and went up higher.

Spots along that rough and terrible mountain route are waiting some poet's breath to blossom with flowers immortal. Here by this gray rock, lay the soldier one shoulder shattered like a piece of potters clay and thus urged two comrades who had halted to bear him to the rear 'don't stop for me—I'm of no account—for God's sake, push right on with the boys!'—and on they went and left him in his bloody vestments. Do ye talk of your royal purple or Tyrian dyes? Besides that hero lying there, those tints grow dull as gray November.

Hard by that little oak, Col. Harker crowding up the hill, saw two brothers one wounded unto death, the other bending over him. The Colonel not seeing the fallen man, ordered the other to move on. 'But this is my brother,' he pleadingly said. The poor stricken fellow on the ground rallied an instant; 'Yes, that's right George, go on, go on!' George turned a pitious glance upon his dying brother, grasped his musket and clambered on. And that was his last farewell, for, the summit reached he hastened back, and there, beside that little oak, the soldier lay in that sleep without a dream.

Between the first and seond ranges of rebel works right in the flush of the charge a captain fell and two men came to his aid. 'Don't wait here; 'go back to your company; one useless man is enough don't make it three.' Just then a cheer floated down the mountain as they took the rifle-pit. 'Dont you hear that?' he cried; 'march!' and away they went Such incidents as these strew all the way from base to crest; happening in an instant lost and forgotten in the whirlwind worthy, every one of them of a medal of gold; worthy every one of them a place in loyal hearts.

With such a spirit inspiring rank and file—a spirit as lofty as the Alpine traveler breathed, whose borden as he went was still 'excelsior'—who can wonder that Mission Ridge was carried in a November afternoon? As I think of it all I seem to have the poets quickened ear, add to me, standing in the valley below, from hundreds of lips now white and still a voice flows down the Ridge side in grand accord.

'A voice comes like a falling star,
EXCELSIOR!'

Hon. Millard Fillmore on the War.

The following is an extract from the eloquent address delivered by the Hon, Millard Fillmore, February 22d upon the occasion of the inauguration of the Great Central Fair at Buffalo:

Three years of civil war have desolated the fairest portion of our land loaded the country with an enormous debt that the sweat of millions yet unborn must be taxed to pay; arrayed brother against brother, and father against son in mortal combat, deluged our country with fraternal blood whitened our battlefields with the bones of the slain and darkened the sky with the pall of mourning. Yet the appalling calamities, which as yet have touched our city more lightly than any other in the land, which have imposed upon us new duties which must be promptly met and generously discharged; and new burdens which must be patiently and cheerfully borne.

We cannot in our humble capacity control the events of this desolating war, We hear its thunders and mark the track of its dosolation and we must meet the immergency as best we can but never de pair of the public. It is no time now to inquire whether it might have been avoided. Let those who seek light on this subject read Washington's Farewell Address. Nor are we now to criticise the conduct of those who control it, awarding praise here and censure there. The impartial historian will do this when the passions engendered by the strife have cooled and partisan prejudice petty jealousies mulignant envy and intriguing, selfish ambition shall be laid in the dust, and, it is hoped, buried in oblivion. And much less are we calledupon to predict when our how this war will end. Let those who seek light on this subject read Gen. Jacksons Farewell Address.

But let us hope that an all wise and merciful Providence will incline the hearts of the people North and South to peace—to a lasting peace, with a restored Union, cemented by fraternal affection under our well-tried and glorious Constitution.

Nor is this time or place to express an opinion as to the policy that should be pursued to reach so desirable an end. But one thing is clear that much must be forgiven, if not forgotten on both sides before this Union can ever be restored; and therefore it is to be hoped that all unnecessary acts of cruelty or wanton destructionof private property or insult, or insolence in triumphing over a fallen foe should be avoided; for all such acts only fire the heart of our adversary with resentment and revenge and thus protract this war, increasing its horrors and leave a sting which will render reunion more difficult, if not impossible.

But it must be apparent to all that the first step towards bringing this war to aclose is to conquer the rebel army. Any negotiations for peace before this is done would prove abortive; and any professed clemency to those in arms, who defy our power would be a mockery, which would be treated with ridicule and contempt. But when we have conquered their armies, and disposed of their leaders then let us show our magnanimity and generosity by winning back the deluded multitude who have been seduced coerced or coerced into this rebellion, by extending to them everyact elemency and kindness in our power and by restoring them to all their rights under the Constitution. This I conceive to be Christian forgivness and the best policy and the only one which can ever restore this Union.

But to accomplish this the Administration must be supported in all its constitutional efforts to conquer and disperse the rebel army; and here let me remark that present appearances indicate a more bloody campaign the ensuing season than any we have yet had, The course of events has done much to incite the South and intensify its hatred to the North and desperation will lend energy and boldness to their efforts. It is never wise to under estimate the power of our adversary. We must therefore give up the consent to dissolution which, I venture to say, no man who loves his country, is prepared to do, or we must send an army into the field sufficiently strong to ensure success; for if we do not conquer and disperse the army the ensuing campaign, the war may be protracted indefinitely, and finally end in separation dishonour, and utter ruin of the country. I say; therefore that the Administration must have sufficient men and money, and this though we may not always approve of the use that is made of either. We can only act in this matter through the powers that be. Any other course would produce counter revolution that would end in anarchy.

MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS.—How much trouble would be saved in this world if every one would remember and practice upon the old adage, Mind your own business. Curiosity is a principle implanted in every human being, but it was never intended that it should degenerate into that mean, prying-into disposition which we discover everywhere about us In every community there is a class of persons who will deserve the title of 'busybodies,' for they spend all their time in minding everybody's business but their own. Do a couple see fit to marry every fact in the history of each is chronicled, and many are the wonderers how they came to chose each other, just as if that were everybody's business but their own. Did you ever hear of a match that suited evrybody? I never did of any but Lucifer matches. Yet whose business is it, if people suit themselves? —what should we care? Does a stranger make his appearance in town—then, who is he? where did he come from? what is he worth? are questions which give our 'busybodies employment for some time.—Let a person do something a little out of his line of conduct, and how quick is it noticed and commented upon, just as if 'twere anybody's business what anybody's business is.

Finally, there is no character more dis pised than the 'busybodies,' tattling, mischievous, slandering 'busybodies;' how easy they carry the mark of the 'green eyed monster.' What do they gain? Not the least thing, They are despised by everybody. If we should be learned wealthy and respected we must mind our own business. They who labor only can win the prize. Yes mind your own business' ought to be thundered into the head of a great many people in the world, for they are a disgrace to themselves to the community and the world.

Benefit of Exercise.

Exercise is health-producing because it works off and out of the system its waste, dead and effete matters, these are all converted into a liquid from called by some humors,' which have exit from the body through the 'pores' of the skin, in the shape of prespiration, which all have seen, and which all know is the result of exercise when the body is in a state of health. Thus it is that persons who do not perspire, who have a dry skin are always either feverish or chilly, and are never well and never can be as long as that condition exists. So exercise by working out of the system its waste, decayed and useless matters keeps the human machine 'free—otherwise it would soon clog up, and the wheels of life would stop forever! Exercise improves the health because every step a man takes tends to impart motion to the bowels: a proper amount of exercise keeps them acting once in twenty-four hours. If they have not motion enough there is constipation which brings on very fatal diseases: hence exercise—especially that of walking—wards off innumerable diseases, when it is kept up to an extent equal to inducing one action of the bowels daily. Exercise is healthful, because the more we exercise the faster we breathe. If we breathe faster we take that much more air into the lungs; but it is the air we breathe which purifies the blood and the more air we take in the more perfectly is that process performed. The purer the blood is the better the health must be. Hence the more a consumptive stays in the house the more certain and more speedy is his health —Halls Journal of Health.

Temptations to Dishonesty.

There are temptations to dishonesty that spring from extravagance Our society is very vicious in its whole structure in this regard, We make no provision for the respectability of people who are in humble circumstances. We hold out inducements to them to live beyond their means. In European society people that are intelligent and refined can entertain their friends in a plain room, with plain furniture, and treat them to a plain repast, and nothing will be thought of it. A German will invite his friends to come and see him, and they together will sit in common fellowship and in pleasing conversation, and make their repast from a loaf of bread and a pitcher of water, and there will be no thought but that the host is respectable. And I think that if a loaf of bread and a pitcher of water were a more frequent meal, there would be less dyspepsia. In Europe they are not ashamed to live plainly even for economic reasons, and men respect each other for it. But in American society we have a vicious tendency to make men ashamed to live within their means. They say,' 'I will not have company unless I can have it as my neighbors do.' They are slaves to other people's opinions. They have not courage to say. 'This is my place, here are my means, and I can afford to entertain my friends in my way; but if they cannot come to see me as I am, they need not come at all.'

Young people want to begin further along than they are able to They want to keep house as twenty years of successful and fruitful industry have enabled men to do it. They measure everything on the pattern of somebody else. There is a want of self-respect founded on one's good breeding and fundamental honesty. And extravagance is almost invariable married to dishonesty.—Watchman and Reflector.

THE MODEL NURSE OF THE AGE.—Florence Nightingale is younger than her royal sister of Windsor Castle—having just completed her fortieth year. Judging from the photograph, she is slight in person, and has a quiet, kindly, old maidish face, She is just such a woman as the Creator would make for such a mission of benevolence. She is no bewitching Hebe stealing young officers' hearts by diamond eyes and cherry lips; nor is she a hard-featured 'Sairey Gamp,' with sleeves and dress tucked up, and going about her work with the rueful alacrity of an undertaker. Her face is a trifle sad, but beaming with benevolence. After all, as Mrs. Primrose says, 'what is good-looking but looking good?'

In replying to the petulant charge that the sick or wounded might have 'more self-control,' good, gentle Florence says: 'Believe me, almost any sick person who behaves decently will exercise more self control every moment of his day than you ever know till you are sick yourself. Almost every step that crosses his room is painful to him; almost every thought that crosses his brain is painful to him; and if he can speak without being savage, and look without being unpleasant, he is exercising self-control. Suppose you have been up all night, and instead of being allowed to have your cup of tea, you were told that you ought to exercise self-control,' what should you say? Now the nerves of the sick man are always in the state that yours are in after you have been up all night.—New York Evangelist.

A Glorious Creature

She was a glorious creature—perhaps a little vain—as she swept along the avenue, drawing a silken train. Her robe was very costly, her train was very long, and murmuring admiration swelled out from every throng of idle swells and loafers the fair one chansed to meet, or who ogled her from taverns and corners of the street.

And thus she promenaded through many weary squares, astonished the people with her grand and lofty air. But at length her train grew heavy and with labor on she strode, while her garment like a drag net took the sweepings of the road. On she struggled till she fainted, her brain spun around, and two near at hand policemen tried to bear her from the ground.

But, though well and able-bodied, their strength was all in vain: they could lift the gentle damsel, but they could not budge her train. At last her skirt was lifted, and a terrible mess lay weltering there, beneath the dress of the lady fair.

There were quids of tobacco and stumps of cigars, 'old sogergs,' that surely had 'been through the wars' —a dead rat and a sausage, an old 'dogtype,' cockroaches, five spiders and pieces of tripe, all, plastered together with feculent dirt—a pretty appendage to an elegant flirt!

They lifted her tenderly—handled with care—put her into a hack and sent her home, and it is to be hoped she will not again be guilty of promenading in her evening dress.—Washington Reg.

Influence of Temper on Health.

Excessive labor, exposure to wet and cold, deprivation of sufficient quantities of necessary and whole some food, habitual bad lodging, sloth, and intemperance, are all deadly enemies to human life; but they are none of them so bad as violent and ungovernable passions. Men and women have survived all these, and at last reached an extreme old age; but it may be safely doubted whether a single instance can be found of a man of violent and irrascible temper, habitually subject to storms of ungovernable passion, who has arrived at a very advanced period of life. It is, therefore, a matter of the highest importance to every one desirous to preserve 'a sound mind in a sound body,' so that the brittle vessel of life may glide down the stream of time smoothly and securely instead of being continually tossed amidst rocks and shoals which endangered its existence, to have a special care, amidst all the vicissitudes and trials, to maintain a quiet posession of his own spirit.

HOW TO WIN LOVE.—If you wish to be a womans love, her hero, her ideal, her delight, her utter rest and ultimatum, you must attain your soul to fine issues—you must bring out the angel in you, and keep the brute under. It is not that you shall stop making shoes and begin to write poetry. No sir! You may make shoes, you may run engines, you may carry coals—blow the huntsman horn, follow the plow, smite the anvil; your face may be brown, your veins knotted, your hands grimmed, and yet you may be a hero. And on the other hand, you may write a verse and be a clown. It is not necessary to feed on embrosia to become divine; nor should one be accursed though he drinks of the mineral Styx. The Israelites ate angel's food in the wilderness and remained stiff-necked and uncircumsised in hearts and ears. The white lilly feeds on slime and unfoldfs a a heavenly glory, Come as the June morning comes. It has wicked its way daintily, passing only among roses. It has blown throught the fields and barn-yards and the common places of the land. It has shrunk from nothing. Its purity has breasted and overborne all things, and so harmonized all that it sweeps around your forehead and sinks in to your heart as soft and sweet as the fragrance of Paradise. To come you, rough from the worlds rough work, with all your out door airs blowing around you, but with a fine inward grace, so strong, so sweet so salubrious, that it meets and masters all things, blending every fairest or foulest odor of earthliness into the great incense of a pure and lofty life.

A SAGACIOUS ANIMAL.—The Rev. A. D. Williams, of Dodge Co. has a Mexican and Indian pony of uncommon intelligence, raised in Mexico. He usually kept in a stall adjoining one in which a cow is fastened, seperated by a partition. Mr. Williams observed for several days that the box in which he fed the pony was found upon the other side of the partition. Happening to be present when the pony had finished his meal, he was surprised to see him take the box with the surplus feed carefully in his teeth and lift it over the partition and set it down before the cow. This benevolent transaction invariable takes place when the pony has more than he cares to eat.—We leave our readers to draw their own inference, whteher this is the result of the moral training received at the Mission or proceeds from the natural sagacity of the animal.—Atlas.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.—We don't believe the following anecdote ha ever been printed, and it is too good to be lost:

One day—no matter when—an honest Hiberian strolled into one of our churches—no matter where—on communion Sunday; and at the invitation for 'all in regular standing,' etc., he being somewhat verdant in matters of this kind, thought he would stay too. Accordingly he remained in his obscure pew, and waited to see how the waters would move. Soon a venerable man approached him and proffered him the bread and cup.—He took a generous slice of the former, and the good man passed along. Going back to the desk, a request was made, if any had been omitted in the distribution, they would rise.

What was the deacon's astonishment to see the occupbant of the strangers pew rise, and with a peculiar beck of the finger, motion him that way. Observing the sign, he walked towards the beckoner, who rose he asapproached, and shading his mouth as he leaned half over the aisle, said in subdued tone—'Have you any chaze?'

The horror stricken functionary started back, without answering, and the stranger was left to his own reflections upon the deficiency of the entertainment.

Beautiful Answers.

A pupil of the Abbe Sicord gave the following extraordinary answers;

'What is gratitude?'

'Gratitude is the memory of the heart.'

'What is hope?'

'Hope is the blossom of happiness.'

'What is the difference between hope and desire?'

'Desire is a tree leaf, hope is a tree in flower, and enjoyment is a tree in fruit.'

'What is eternity?'

'A day without yesterday or tomorrow; a line that has no end.'

'What is time?'

'A line that has two ends—a path which begins in the cradle and ends in the tomb.'

'What is God?'

'The necessary being, the sun of eternity, the merchant of nature, the eye of justice, the watchmaker of the universe, the soul of the world.'

'Does God reason?'

'Man reasons because he doubts; he deliberates—he decides. God is omniscient; He never doubts—He therefore never reasons.'

THINGS TO REMBER.— A surveyor's chain is 4 poles, or 76 feet. divided into 100 links or 792 inches.

A square chain is 16 square poles, and 10 square chains is an acre.

Four roods are an acre, each containing 1,240 square yards, or 34, 787 feet, or 24 yards 28 inches on each side.

A pole is five yards and a half each way.

An acre is 4.840 square yards, or 69 yards 1 foot 8½ inches each way; and threeacres are 120 yards and a half each way.

A square mile, 1,760 yards each way, is 640 acres; half a mile, or 880 yards each way, is 160 acres; a quarter of a mile, or 440 yards each way is a park or farm of forty acres, and a furlong, or 220 yards each way is 10 acres.

The Savannah News of the 23d, contains the following paragraph. A little more detail of the disperse of withdrawal of Sherman's force would have been desirable.—Probably withheld, as the thing was the merest conjecture. It says:

'Nothing of importance has occurred during the past few days. Now that Sherman's force is dispersed or withdrawn, there appears to be but little anxiety as to anything Farragut may accomplish with his fleet off Mobile. He would find it very difficult to get his vessels through the shallow waters of the pass and fords. The Mobile Register remarks that 'The Hartford frigate and the Monitors can have no place in the picture, and we have nets enough set for smaller craft. He must come here, then, with a large army, and he must come to encounter the best Confederate troops behind the best and strongest works that have been erected in the South.'

A sailor went to a watchmaker and presenting a small French watch to him; demanded to know how much the repair would come to. The watchmaker after examining it said:

'It will be more expense repairing than the original cost.'

'I don't mind that,' said the tar, 'I will even give you double the original cost for I have a veneration for the watch.'

'What might you have given for it?' said the watchmaker.

'Why,' replied the tar, 'I gave the owner a blow on the head for it, andif you repair it, I will give you two.'

A cabin boy on board ship, the captain of which was a religious man, was called up to be whipped for some misdemeanor. Little Jack went crying and trembling, and said to the captain, 'Oh, sir, will you wait until I say my prayers?' 'Yes,' was the stearn reply. 'Well, then,' replied Jack, looking up and smiling triumphantly, 'I'll say them when I get ashore.'

'Mr. Smith, I wish to speak to you privately. Permit me to take you apart for a few moments.'

Smith—(Who wasn't the least frightened,)—'Certainly, sir, if you promise to put me together again.'

The Route to Idaho.

In another column we publish an interesting letter from Mr. A. B. Smith, of Yanckton, which we advise our readers to peruse carefully. Mr. Smith has been a resident of Dakota Territory for a number of years, and had ample opportunities to become well acquainted with the country over which the travel to the gold fields will pass.

He condemns the action of Congress in appropriating the sum of ten thousand dollars for the protection of emigrants going by way of Fort Abercrombie. Every citizen of Southern Minnesota ought to condemn it as very little travel will be by that route. According to the information that people get of the superiority of the route by way of Fort Thompson over that by way of Fort Abercrombie, so will the travel be. And if the ten thousand dollar appropriation had been applied to opening the route from Mankato the benefit to Idaho emigration would be treble what it will now be. In helping to bring this matter about St. Paul has exhibited a degree of selfishness and disregard for the interest of other portions of the State, that is in perfect keeping with her past character.

Commissioners to Receive Soldiers Votes.

In the appointment of the Commissioners from the Eastern and Mississippi Districts, to receive the votes of soldiers Gov. Miller has shown how well he can reward his friends, and has displayed a trait of character which we did not think he possessed. To the Southern part of the State he has given no Republican Representative, but, on the contrary has appointed two democrats, "dyed in the wool," namely J. J. Porter and Andrew C. Dunn. Mr Dunn was probably considered a Republican though he is classed as a Democrat. Every one knows that up to the time of his election as Clerk of the House, he was one of the most rabid Secessionists in the State, but his sudden transformation to a good Republican and Union man has so discomfuddled the "Governor of the bravest men and noblest women on Earth" that he forgot the wishes of remote friends. If this is a specimen of our chivalric Governor the fewer we have of such the better.

A New Enterprise.—Capt. Davidson well known as the "Steamboat King," is having five of his steamers fitted out for the purpose of running to Idaho. The boats selected for this new trade are the Favorite, Frank Steele, Hudson, Stella Whipple and Chippewa Falls.

They are advertised to start from La Crosse the 5th of April for Fort Benton on the Missouri river, which is in the heart of Idaho. It is anticipated the fleet will make the trip in thirty days. Parties intending to try their fortunes in the gold mines of Idaho will do well to try this new route, as they are promised there is no danger apprehended from the Indians.—Winona Republican.

The New York Herald appeared on Thursday morning, with only three quarters of a column of editorial "leaders." This is a great improvement.

IDAHO!

LETTER FROM A RESIDENT OF DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Description of the Proposed Routes to the Idaho Gold Mines.

Mankato, March 8th, 1864.

To the Editor of the Mankato Union.

Upon my arrival at this place a few days ago, and hearing that there is considerable excitement in your State in regard to the Idaho Gold Mines, and the various proposed routes, I thought it would not be out of place for me to lay before your readers what little information I have gained of the typhography of the country and the feasibility of some o these routes.

I have been a resident of Dakota Territory for the last seven years, and during that time have nearly traveled over every portion of it.

It is an established fact that the ensuing spring and summer will witness a perfect rush of emigration to the gold mines from Minnesota, Illinois Wisconsin and Iowa, and every one interested is seeking for information as to the shortest and most feasible route.

As near as I can learn, from reading extracts from your St. Paul papers, strenuous efforts are being made to draw emigration by way of Ft. Abercrombie or the Northern route. This is a purely local scheme, designed to benefit that place at the expense of emigrants, and also at the expense of other places, on some of the Southern Routes. The route by way of Fort Abercrombie is nearly eight hundred miles longer, and passes through the region of country inhabited by Indians hostile to the whites. These warlike tribes cannot get ammunition on the upper Missouri, and therefore have to resort to the northern part of Dakota Territory, in the vicinity of the British Posessions, where they can trade with the Hudson Bay Company.

I notice that Congress has made an appropriation of ten thousand dollars, for the protection of emigrant trains passing over this Abercrombie route, exclusive of other appropriations for the opening of the road. I cannot see any justness in this, as four fifths of the emigration to Idaho will not pass over this route. Miners will seek the shortest route, equal saefty being considered, and have no wish to go eight hundred miles to the north, for the sake of a military escort, that can be had by taking the other route and going to Fort Thomson, where it will connect with Sully's expedition.

I wish to call your attention and that of your readers to two routes, the feasibility, safety, and shortness of either of which I am well posted. Emigrants can have their choice of either of them.

From Mankato to Fort Thomson, thence following the Fort Pierre road to Ft Pierre, and then crossing the Missouri, follow up the river to the mouth of the Shyenne river, thence up that stream to the headwaters of the northern fork, pursuing a westerly course to the headwaters of the Yellow Stone, leaving the Black Hills to the South, and continue a westerly course to Bannock City near the base of the Rocky Mountains.

The streams to cross on this route, which are easily forded, are, first, after leaving the Sheyenne, the Chanyuska River which is a branch of the little Missouri, Powder, Tange, Big Horn, and a small stream near the head of Lake Estis, which is also a tributary of the Yellow Stone.

These are the only streams to cross after leaving the Sheyenne.

The distance from Mankato to Ft. Thompson is three hundred miles; to Ft Sully or Ft Pierre sixty miles; to Sheyenne River forty-five miles; making in all four-hundred and five miles to the mouth of the Big Sehyenne. There is ample timber to be found over the greater portion of the route, and the grazing country is good, and therefore good camping grounds are not scarce.

If any one feels unsafe in going this route, on account of Indians, they can go to Lake Shetek, thence to Big Sioux Falls, thence to Yanckton. From Yanckton to the town of Niobrara, or Fort Randall; thence to the Niobrara valley, and follow up that valley to the mouth of the Keyapaha river, and then take what is called the Davis route through to the mines, which route takes a north westerly course.

This is a very safe route so far as any trouble with Indians is concerned. There is plenty of good water, grass and timber until you reach the base of the mountains and then there is a scarcity of timber.

The distance to Fort Randall is two-hundred and fifty miles.

There is no doubt but what gold is plenty in the mines. I have seen large nuggets of it, and also gold dust that was brought down to Yankton, by persons in the employ of the American Fur company, who came down the river in Mackinaw boats, for the last three years.

I do not wish to say anything to deceive any one, but I have stated what I know to be true; that taking Mankato as the starting point, the route through to Fort Thompson, and thence to the Big Shyenne, is the shortest one, and is equally as safe as any other.

Michigan Oil.—A company has been formed to prosecute the work of obtaining oil from the well recently discovered at Albion, Michigan. Some doubt is expressed whether the whole thing may not be a trick, but the better oppinion appears to be that a genuine oil well has been discovered. Some doubt is also expressed whether if the well is genuine, it may not be easily exhausted. We should suppose if a well has been found, the probabilities are that the oil must be found in inexhaustible quantities. We cannot understand how an isolated oil well of limited extent could exist or be found anywhere.

United States Internal Revenue.

The following notice from Geo. W. Baker, Assesor of this district will be of interest to tax payers.

Every person who shall fail to make such return by the day specified will be liable to be assessed by the Assessor according to the best information which he can obtain; and in such case the Assesor is required to add fifty per centum to the amount of the items of such list.

Every person who saall deliver to any Assessor any false or fraudulent list or statement, with intent to evade the valuation or enumeration required by law, is subject to a fine of five hundred dollars; and in such case the list will be made out by the Assessor or Assistant Assessor, and from the valuation and enumeration so made there can be no appeal.

The Wonders of Photography.—There is sold with Microcopes generally a number of objects properly fixed in glass, convenient for scrutiny by the instrument. One bit of glass which exhibits to the naked eye what appears to be a few small and very distinct scratches, when put into the machine reveals nine distinct photograph portraits of Union Generals each with the name distinctly printed under it, and all abundantly large and perfect to be distinguished without the name. With the wonders of microcope we are familiar—but the of wonders photohraphy in this direction is something new and marvelous.

Ex-President Millard Fillmore delivered an inaugural address on the 22d of February, in behalf of the Great Central Fair at Buffalo. During his remarks he said that the war was upon us, it was no time now to inquire whether it might have been avoided. The first step to be taken towards bringing the war to a close was to conquer the rebel army and until that was done the negotiation for peace would prove abortive. The administration must be supported in all constitutional efforts to conquer and disperse the rebel army—must have sufficient men and money and this, too, in spite of any opinions as to whether or not they were applied to proper use.

The number of emigrants arriving is still large for the season. The number landed at New York last week was 1,238, making a total of 10, 018 since January 1. The number landed in the corresponding period of 1863 was 4,185 or considerably less than this year. The balance of the commutation fund in bank at present is $53,024,15.

Bills Vetoed.

The Governor declines to approve the following bills left with him at the close of the session:

H. F. 148, to vacate part of the town of St. Albans in Hennepin county,

H. F. 187, to vacate a portion of the town plot of Chaska.

H. F. 193, to vacate a portion of the town of Dakota, Dakota Co.

H. F. 19 extending time for payment of taxes in Sibley Co.

H. F. 37, authorizing payment of expenses for the arrest of Christian Leind.

H. F. 126, an act allowing legal voters of school districts containing less than ten voters—not less than three being present to transact certain business.

H. F. 186, an act to amend section 20 of chapter 57 compiled statutes in relation to equity proceedings.

S. F. 154, an act to provide for the referrence of certain civil actions,

Thrilling scene on ice.

At the breaking up of the ice in the Mississippi at St. Louis the following scene occurred:

Monday afternoon about two o'clock an exciting scene was witnessed by thousands who had gathered upon the levee. The landing was lined with throngs of people, congregated in expectation of the immediate breaking up of the ice in the harbor. Presently was heard the scream of a steam whistle from a ferry boat moored at the upper end of the levee. It was a long and loud scream and before its unearthly echoes had died away the sound was taken up by a boat up on the other side. Then all along the landing steampipes joined in the harsh and unmelodious chorus. The multitude pressed closer. 'The ice is moving! look! look!' many voices scarcely whispered. And so it was moving with a very dull grating noise.

Out on the river midway between either shore, was, at this perilous junction, descried the form of a woman, the only being there was to be seen on the ice. She had stopped picking her adventurous way and stood motionless, except as the cold floor bore her gently on. All eyes bent earnestly and anxiously upon her and the crowd watched with almost breathless interest. 'Go back! go back!' was shouted from a hundred throats, seemingly unheeded, from the fact that at that distance the advice could not be heard.—The woman was beckoned for with hands and handkerchiefs, but without any response of any kind. Once she was seen to raise her hands as if in dispair and a moment after she sank to her waist. The pitying silence on shore that followed this scene was quickly succeeded by loud shouts and clapping of hands as the trembling female scrambled again to her feet only to look wistfully around, but not to take another step. By this time the ice had ceased to move and the spectators began to experience a sense of relief. Still the woman stood as if transfixed, her clothing hanging loosely around her, and she probably shivering from the cold her immersion must have produced.

Just as the woman had gone down three men were observed to start from the other side. One of them after going a short distance turned back. The others made straight for the one object and on a run. It was a venturesome undertaking.—They had got half way when the woman fell again, and this time it was longer before she presented herself to a full view, her body having almost entirely disappeared. Yet once more she stood erect, not daring to take a step in any direction.—At last the two men got near her. They hesitated, and were seen to motion her to them but she was completely paralized from fear and dared do nothing. A moment after one of the men sprang to her side and then woman and man both went down. When the eyes that turned away to avoid witnessing a painful sight looked again the woman was on solid ice, and the two men were on either side of her supporting the drenching form, and hurrying her to the Illinois shore. It was not till the trio reached the dry land that the multitude gave vent to their joy in loud huzzas.

The Toronto Leader relates that on Monday last a Buffalo steam tug, with two scows in tow, got too far into the current of Niagra river, just above the falls, for the head of steam on, and the Captain and crew of four men, become alarmed, leaped overboard and struck for the shore. The Captain and three men succeeded in getting to land, but the fourth man sunk beneath the leaping and boiling waters and was carried over the awful cataract. Some men in one of the scows were rescued by two boatmen, who put off in a skiff to their assistance. The tug and one scow went over the falls, but the other scow struck on a rock just before the brink, and remains there.

We noticed some days ago that a railroad accident had occured in France, and that several railroad officials had been arrested. The engineer was sentenced to three year's imprisment, and the stoker and driver to six months' confinement. Heavy fines were also imposed.—What a nice thing it would be to import a little French law into this country.

Execution of Streeter the Medina Murderer.

From the Cleveland Leader. Feb, 27.

The impending execution of Fredrick F. Streeter, who murdered the Coy family in Medina on the night of the 2nd of July last, and was upon conviction sentenced to be hung on Friday, January 22d, between 10 a. m. and 4 p.m. has created a widespread excitement. To this the peculiar and extraordinary circumstances of the case have greatly contributed. The peculiar atrocity of a terrible murder of a married couple and their only child a boy of seven—the attempted arson—the bold robbery—the curious, romantic and almost wonderful identification of the criminal—the story of the trial—the incidents of his cunning escape, and the extraordinary re-capture—and above all the extraordinary character and bearing of the prisoner, whose life is a romance, and whose entire demeanor, though inconsistant, extravagant and unaccountable, was nevertheless wonderfully collected and firm—all this tended most powerfully to create and ferment an almost uncontrollable excitement as the day set for the final and closing act of the mysterious drama rapidly approached.

THE FENCE AROUND THE GALLOWS BURNED.

As an illustration of the overwhelming tide of public sentiment, it may be mentioned that during the night preceding the execution the high fence which in accordance with the law had been erected around the scaffold was turned up and burned down—and that everybody expected and nobody was indignant at the act.

THE LAST HOURS OF THE CONDEMNED.

Streeter spent almost all of the last night of his life in writing letters to his wife, mother and sisters. The contents of these letters are not of interest to the public, and into these sacred secrets the public has no right to intrude. Each contained fresh protestations of innocence.

During the morning he conversed rationally and cooly with visitors, never for a moment losing his self possession and ease of manner. At half past eleven he had prayers in his room the Rev. Mr. Conant officiating Soon after he was dressed for the execution. He wore a suit of black over which fell his white shroud, prepared with grotesque and ghastly care. The white cap upon his head added to his sepulchral appearance. A brief minute sufficed him for a calm leave of his sister, and he was ready for

THE EXECUTION EXERCISES.

It is now one o'clock, and at half past one the drop will fall. Thirty minutes more—the seconds are ticking off swiftly The Rev. Mr. Brauer who married Streeter and officiates on the occasion by the criminal's request, kneels, and as a sudden silence sweeps across the throng, beseeches God to look with mercy upon this scene and bless it to all concerned—if the victim be innocent, to interpose for his relief—if he be guilty to evoke good from the great evil. During the prayer's Streeters firm, stern, unmoved face is bent, but his eyes are not closed and are fastened on the floor.

The friends of the condemned were then permitted two by two, to take their leave of him. His friends? What a mockery that word must have been to the guilty man's ear, as eye, wandering over the vast throng, seeks in vain some face for approving sympathy, finds no glance of sustaining approbation, discovers no one who does not wish him dead! Does he think this? His impassive face gives no sign of it, and he shakes the few proffered hands in almost perfect silence. Once or twice this silence was broken.

Let us not linger upon these terrible details. The time is flying He is placed, still sitting upon the drop, his arms bound to his sides at his elbows his face covered with the whole cap, and the rope passed tightly around his neck,—he is left a white shapeless figure, nothing more. No emotion shook that figure. What passed behind the veil we know not but the last time that mortal eyes beheld the living face of Fredrick Streeter it bore the same undaunted courage as before. Two minutes yet! They are passed in dead silence.—a reflected agony of suspense to all,—an agony of suspense of untold terror to the waiting criminal. Silence reigns.—

Broken by the quick bang of the drop, the fall of the clattering chair, the dull thung of the body as it reached its limits. It falls eight feet clear; and life is at once extinct But its vestiges and traces remain. The hands are caught up; in a tense death spasm to the chest and then tremble slowly back again. The legs twitch fearfully once or twice. and the body oscillates in the air, All this is over in a moment, but for several minutes after, the shoulder blades twitch perceptibly.

A half hour slowly passes, during which time the crowd is with difficulty kept at a distance by a guard. At last the body is examined life pronounced extinct and the confined body entrusted to its friends.

Only a Want of Culture.—An exchange tells a story of an old usurer who went one day to see a former borrower, who had since grown from poverty to independence. They went into the garden. Passing along a walk flanked on either side with flowers of great beauty and variety, the visitor made no remarks until he came to the potato patch, when he exclaimed: 'My friend, you'll have a fine crop of potatoe's there!'

'That's just like you,' said the proprietor; 'when gentlemen and ladies pass through my garden, they looked at the flowers, but when a darned hog comes in all he can see is potatoes!'

ATTENTION is called to the card of friend Flower of the Clifton,

LEWIS & FRISBIE have a good article of black ink for sale, which, having tried we can recommend.

ORDERED BACK.—Capt. Clarke has been ordered back to Mankato on recruiting service and arrived yesterday.

The Panorama of the War will exhibit at Winnebago City this evening, Friday, and at Blue Earth City, to-morrow evening, the weather permiting.

MEETING OF THE COUNTY BOARD.—The Board of County Commissioner will hold a special meeting on Thursday the 24th inst. at the Register's office.

THE river at Garden City is so high now that teams cannot ford. The Stage company is obliged to have conveyances on each side of the river.

ON A FURLOUGH.—Capt. Davy passed through town Wednesday, on his way to Blue Earth City, on a visit to his friends. No officer in the service is more popular than jolly Cap Davy.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY.—This publication for March we have received, and can speak of it as we have of previous members, that it is one of the best Monthlies extant.

HARPER FOR MARCH.—This excellent monthly is again on our table, and we take pleasure in speaking in its favor.

NEW LIVERY STABLE.—B. D. Pay has got his livery stable in running order, and is now prepared to accommodate his friends with a good rig. He has good horses, good buggies (Cutters too, we guess) and can be found at his office at all hours.

THE LAWS.—Our readers will notice in this issue a small batch of laws Whenever we have long laws exceeding three columns, we shall publish them in a supplement.

BLUE EARTH FERRY.—We notice that Wm. H. Miller has been placed in charge of the ferry over the Blue Earth. He is very accomodating, which is the stepping stone to popularity.

BRIDGES.—The law passed in the Legislature, for the issuance of bonds for building of bridges in the County places the amounts as follows $7,000 for the Blue Earth, $1200 for two bridges at Garden City, $1200 at Vernon, and $1400 over the Lesueur on the new State road.

COUGHS, Hoarseness, and the various throat affections to which Public Speakers, Military Officers, and singers are liable, relieved by 'Brown Bronchial Troches.' Having a direct influence to the affected parts, they allay Pulmonary Irritations:

DEATH OF AN OLD SETTLER.—We learn just before going to press of the death of M. O. Bennett, of Tivoli.—Mr. Bennett was an early settler on the Le Sueur, and by his enterprise had opened quite a settlement.

His decease, while it is a severe blow to his large family will be generally felt as he was a public spirited man—one active in every good work.

STREAK OF GOOD LUCK.—W. Y. Smith and Dan Porter, who enlisted with Captain Clarke, were detailed for special duty the former in the commssary Department, and the latter in the Quartermaster's department at Fort Snelling as soon as they were mustered into the service

PLEASANT PARTY.—A few ladies, in accordance with their leap year privileges, gave a very pleasant entertainment at the Mankato House, Tuesday evening last. We were unable to be present, but understand that everything was gotten up with good taste and was creditably managed.

ENLISTED —Thomas George of Winnebago City, with a heart full of patriotism and spoiling for a fight, has enlisted in Co. I. 5th Iowa Cavalry, now a part of Brackett's Battalion. Tommy's many friends will miss him; yet we wish him a God speed and a safe return.

THE PANORAMA.—The Panorama on exhibition here Saturday evening last, gave very general satisfaction The astronomical part of the entertainment was very instructive.

SICK.—Capt. Slaughter and Lieut. Ruegg, have been on the sick list for a day or two past. and 2nd Lieut. Howard has been in command of the company.

FOR THE FORT.—Twenty-two of the Fifth Iowa Boys started for Fort Snelling Tuesday morning, and four Wednesday morning. They have enjoyed themselves finely visiting among their friends, during the period of their furloughs, yet were willing to return to duty.

RETURNED —J. J. Porter, Senator from this District, returned home on Wednesday last. His labors during the winter have been very severe. It is hinted in private circles that he brought up a portion of the railroad with him. The rolling stock he has corked up in his trunk.

PERSONAL.—J. S. Latimer, Representative from the 20th District, has returned home. We believe his services have been acceptable, saving that he ought not to have introduced the bill giving a portion of Martin county to Faribault.

J. A. Wiswell, Esq, arrived at his home in Garden City, Sunday evening last.

SNOW AGAIN.—Tuesday morning it commenced snowing, and continued until Thursday night. About six inches of snow fell, altogether, which melted nearly as fast as it fell. As a consequence the roads are very bad, and pedestrians find it sloppy and disagreeable getting around. It will have a tendency, however, to raise the water in the river.

THANKS.—The soldiers of Kasota will accept our thanks for their good conduct and attention, when our Panorama was on exhibition at that place. Many of the ladies were timid about coming out, but were assured by Dapt. Davy that all would be right. And so it was. We never had better order in any assembly. All honor to the blue jackets.

R. F. BROWN & CO

A RUNAWAY.—A span of ponies attached to a cutter, all belonging to E. P. Evans of Garden City, ran down street Wednesday, at a break neck pace. Mr. Evans and Lieut Potter were in the cutter, but were not injured, It is stated that E. P. has been buying a new variety of oats lately, and that those oats were filled with "technicalties" which were the cause of his ponies running away Wouldn't wonder! If so E. P. got beat on "technicalities" for certain,

[Advertisement.]

THANKS.—My usual good luck procured for me an invitation to the party gotten up by the "Unknowns" on Tuesday evening, and I take this occasion to return thanks to the bachelor messenger, who so faithfully carried out the wishes of the "unknowns." Society seems to be divided into three classes, the aristocratic nabobs, the satin slipper unknowns and the wooden shoe bobs. I had with me my wooden shoes, but discovered to my horror that satin slippers were worn by all. The wall flowers and kitchen mechanics were not present. "I still live."

X. O. P.

YANKEE MILLS FLOUR.—Our friends in Garden City and vicinity will please bear in mind that that "veteran old hoss" E. P. Evans, is selling No. 1 flour of the Yankee mills brand, for two dollars and twenty-five cents per sack. They need not fear being "sold" as there are no "technicalities" to be found in this brand—they having "played out."

N. B.—We will send you word when we want our sack.

AT HOME AGAIN:—We were glad to meet our townsman James B. Hubbell, last week who has returned from Sioux City and Fort Thompson He came through in five days, and is looking hearty and robust. Mr, H says that the report that the Indians were dissatisfied, and had a scarcity of food was not true. They are out on the plains on a grand buffalo hunt. He will return in a few days.

THE LADY'S FRIEND.—We have received the March number of this excellent magazine which is fast gaining popularity. Its "make up" is equal to any of the monthlies we receive. and we have tried to find fault with the reading matter, but it is of no use. This number contains an extension fashion plate. and a piece of music entitled the "Chattanooga Grand March," both of which are worth having. We will furnish it to subscribers for $1,50 per year.

RELIEF TO SOLDIERS FAMILIES.—A meeting of the citizens of Mankato will be held at the City Hall on Monday evening next for the purpose of electing a permanant Committee to dispense aid to the families of Soldiers and to take efficient measures to give speedy and certain relief to such as are suffering, Let all patriotic Citizens be there.

THE Second Regiment left for La Crosse on the 6th inst. They took away one hundred and forty-two recruits. Capt Beatty is ordered to remain in St. Paul on recruiting service, and those who intend to enlist in the Second can apply to him.

See the card of Dr Youngman, of Garden City.

WRITING SCHOOL.—Messrs. Shaw and Andurs have started a writing class at the quarters of Co. E. in West Mankato. They have been quite successful.

POSTPONED.—The Meeting of the Young Men's Lyceum has been postponed until Saturday Evening. By order of the President.

THERE will be a social hop at City Hall this evening, under the auspices of the boys of Co. E.

THE proprietor would announce to the traveling public that his house is now completed and furnished throughout in the best style and he is now prepared to accommodate all who may favor him with their patronage. From long experience in the hotel business in eastern cities he flatters himself that he understands the wants of the traveling public and will spare no pains to make the Clifton an agreeable stopping place. All who may be visiting Mankato, either for business or pleasure, especially those from the surrounding counties are invited to call and satisfy themselves. Attached to the premises are stables not excelled in the State either for capacity or convenience. The proprietor thankful for the very liberal patronage bestowed upon his house, would say to all stopping at the Clifton you will meet the same cordial and welcome reception as heretofore. SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do; will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapied than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood; and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint. Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Boodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparations contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes. Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health, within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs: Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of bilious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant. being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

Poetry.

For the Mankato Union,

Wind from the Southland.

BY DELLY ATHERTON.

Wind from the south land, light and free,
Pause in thy flight and answer me!
Hast thou been where the camp fire darkly gleam
On the dimpled face of the flowing stream?

"I came from the isle-dotted sea to-day,
I swept by the camp on my hitherward way,
And many brave men were resting there
In the land of the south, so bright and fair."

Did'st thou see one fairer than all the rest,
With the proudest eye, and the manliest breast,
Did he whisper no name—my name—to thee,
Did he give the no message of love for me?

"I was a soldier proud and free,
And these were the words he gave to me,
Father in heaven! Look down from above,
Keep me true to my God, my country, my love."

Speed thou, Oh south wind, speed on thy bright way,
Thou hast bro't me a message of gladness to day,
Tho' lowly and humble my soldier may be,
He is true to his God, to his country and me.

Mankato, March 7th.

Original Miscellany.

For the Union.

Twilight Thoughts.

In the gray twilight of this winter evening my thoughts have wandered back, through the lights and shadows of by-gone years, to the happy hours of childhood, to the old homestead, with its moss-grown eaves, and old fashioned porch, where the ivy and woodbine struggled for predominance over my favorite climbing rose. And, now, when the hopes and dreams of intervening years, are fading like the day-light in the west, every familiar object of that early home rises before me, pure and beautiful, as in "the days of yore." The maples on the hillside, the weeping willow that grew down by the brook, the cherry tree under whose spreading branches brother Charlie used, in the autumn time, to arrange his store-house with tiny shelves bending under their load of yellow, crimson, and emerald leaves gathered from the surrounding trees, and last, but not least, the old brown school house, with its rows of smiling faces, and happy hearts, and best of all, the grape-vine swing attached to the boughs of the chestnut tree that shaded the play ground. Life looked so bright and joyous then, ere our pathway led among thorns, or under the shadow of the dark cypress. Weeks, months, and years, went by, with fairy tread so light and free, that youth, seemed but a rosy dream of pleasure.

There are times in our lives when the passing moments leave an indelible impress on the mind and heart; times, the memory of which shall fade only with life itself. And such was that christmas evening years ago, when the lamps gleamed joyously from the windows of the old farmhouse, making long lines of light on the glistening snow, and the merry chime of sleigh bells announced the arrival of our guests. It was a very happy family they were coming to visit. My mother, my brothers Halbert and Charlie, cousin Imogen, and myself. To me our number seemed unbroken. I had never known a father's love, for ere my infant lips had learned to speak his name, he passed away from earth, commending his children to the tender watchful care of a mother's love, and faithfully had that mother fulfilled his wishes; guiding our wayward feet up through the slippery paths of youth, striving ever to impress on our youthful minds the beautiful truths of the christian religion; and warning us oft times against the consequences of evil associations when we should go forth to mingle in the great world's busy throng. Already the family bonds were being loosened. Brother Halbert, who was now a law student in a distant city, had come home to spend the holidays with us, and our cousin who was three years my senior, had just returned from college. "Gloriously beautiful looked" Imogen Wallace that evening, as she moved amid the merry throng. Never had the old rooms worn a gayer look, or their walls echoed back sweeter music than when she opened the piano, and sang again the old Scotch ballads she loved so well; and yet bitter tears would have usurped the place of happy smiles, and sadness instead of mirth ruled that festive hour could we have foreseen the fate that awaited our beautiful darling. But not until the golden light of summer lay on the New England hills did the shadow which blighted her fair young life cross our threshold. It was then that a stranger, traveling through the States, attracted by the beauty of its natural scenery, lingered for a while in the village near our home. He was handsome, intelligent, and agreeable, and soon became the hero of picnic excursions, and social parties, not a few of which were given in honor of the talented foreigner. And when there was a quiet wedding in the village church, and our dark-eyed cousin gave her hand and heart into the stranger's keeping, none wondered, but many said "what a splendid couple." He like the giant oak able to shelter the gentle being at his side from life's rude storms, and she, in her fragile beauty, clinging like the ivy, to his strong arm for support. Tis, ever thus; the world sees only the glittering exterior. Ill-fated Imogen! Her orange wreath was scarcely withered ere she found, that the idol she had worshipped was only clay, and the heart,—for which she gave one "pure and fresh as the morning dew,"—was false and treacherous—the lurking place of unholy thoughts and dark purposes. The trial was too great for her sensitive nature, and ere the roses bloomed again in her native land, cousin Imogen slept in the grave of the broken-hearted, beneath the sunny skies of far off Italy.

And the shadows grew darker in our home. So dark that ere long it passed into the hands of strangers, and we sought a new one in the wilds of the far north-west, where, for a time, the activity and excitement incident to frontier life, served to dim the memory of the past. Much as I had loved the old home, I was scarcely grieved at the necessity which had compelled us to leave it; for around our new one every thing was so wild, so strange, so beautiful. I gloried in the privileges it afforded for indulging the habits which in my childhood had obtained for me the sobriquet of "Gipsy Kate." Over the prairies where the crimson and white phlox lifted up their beautiful heads to meet the sunshine, or waved to and fro with summer winds, through forests glades where the timid wild flowers played hide and-seek with the stray beams of sunlight that struggled through the dense foliage overhead, I wandered. Where but a short time before, the braves of Winneshiek hunted the elk and deer in undisturbed security, or danced around their camp fires as they lighted up the surrounding hills. Time rolled on, bringing with it many changes, and year after year, as the wave of civilization advanced westward, found us ever following in its wake. Until in the neighborhood of our first western home, where we had found every thing so wild and uncultivated, the shriek of the engine was heard; cities and villages rose on the sites of old agencies and missions, and golden harvests waved on the hunting grounds of Winneshiek.

And now my thoughts go out to a dreary November day when the clouds wept "great slow falling tear drops, such as the heart sheds over the memory of treasures lost," and the winds sighed mournfully through the pines, where we buried our mother. Then a little later, to the night when we stood by our mother's bedside for the last time, and heard the whispered words, "though I walk through the valley and shadow of death I will fear no evil," and then to the hallowed spot, where we had laid her, weary with the weight of years, down to the quiet grave-rest, to which she had looked with longing eyes.

From the retrospective glance my thoughts come back to the present. What of brother Charlie, the only one of the household band, that is left to love little "Gipsy Kate?"

And now imagination paints the hurried march, the roar of battle, the groans of the wounded and dying, with all the perils and dangers of the tented field, for he is a soldier under the dear old flag. And I? God help me? I am an orphan, and alone! And the blinding tears fall thick and fast, as I gaze from my paper to the photograph beside me, and bitter thoughts well up from the lonely chambers of a weary aching heart. Thoughts of brave men suffering in crowded hospitals, of manly forms lying under the grave-sod, where no mother's tear may fall, or gentle sister's hands plant flowers,—the beautiful emblems of a glorious immortality; of widowed wives, and fatherless children, of bright eyes grown lusterless, and homes darkened and made desolate forever. But thank God! far above the dark clouds which hover over our homes, the "proud eagle," still soars undaunted and undismayed. And although it is hard to think, that for wise purposes all these woes have fallen upon us, it must be so, for God is just, and will not afflict his people without cause.

> "The bitter waters with the sweet are flowing.
> The snake that bites bears yet its antidote.
> Beside the Upas tree a balm is growing,
> Where wrong is, there right cannot be remote."

It may be that this fierce struggle is destined to cease only when the Upas tree of slavery, which we cherished at first as a choice exotic, but which in its after growth, spread forth mighty branches until its shadow became a foul blot on our nation's escutcheon,—"shall be twice dead plucked up by the roots," and the balm of universal liberty planted by loyal hands in its stead.

God grant that our land may come out of the fiery crucible of war purified and redeemed. That its light may be to the oppressed millions of the Old World, what the star of Bethlehem was to the shepherds of Judea, "a light to guide their feet in the way of peace."

Thoughts on the Death of Eva.

Dear little Eva. How we all loved her. It is just one year since first I saw her; yet she had greatly endeared herself to my heart. I well remember the time I was going into Minnesota to spend the remainder part of the winter, previous to emigrating to this part of the State, (her parents lived at that time in the Southern part) and her little brother came across the plains to meet us and ride back, after the fashion of most boys. He seemed rather shy yet with al anxious to form our acquaintance. After riding along a little distance I heard her father say, "here little daughter." I looked but could see no child and was just going to ask where she might be, as she peeped shyly at us from behind an old stump, we were at that moment just passing. I called to her, to come and ride by me and she came at once, with a quiet grace that was peculiarly her own. I said will you tell me your name! For answer she smiled. Mr. G—— said, "tell the lady your name, daughter," and she replied gently, Eva May madam. To my other questions as to her age, &c., she replied readily and then she turned to me and said, I am coming to school to you. I asked her if she had ever been to school. She said no, but she knew she should like to for Allie was coming too.

This was a playmate of hers, somewhat older in years but still almost the only one she had ever had up to that time, I formed an attachment for her, nearly the same in character as every teacher forms for pupils who are possessed of a winning, and gentle manner. And moreover, as I was a member of this family until we came out in the spring I had opportunity to know her more intimately. We came to this place in the spring; and in the course of the summer, there was a Sabbath School opened, of which she became a member, and a very earnest one too. Her teacher said to me once that, "she always knew she should see Eva's smiling face, every Sabbath, and better still. She committed to memory all of the "Second chapter of Matthew, relative to the birth of Christ; and many were her questions regarding that great event. She had changed much in the last months of her life; growing more sedate and thoughtful, asking us many questions about God, Heaven, Death, our state in the future, for as we look back we can remember many things which plainly show that for months she had been gradually weaning from the things of this world, and drawing nigh to those of a better. It was on the fifth of Feb. that she was taken ill. She had had a bad cold but no serious effect was apprehended. She played about the next day, but was seized again the next night. From this she never rallied except momentarily. She was conscious to the last, suffering great pain; yet she did not complain. The only words she spoke, were just a few moments before she breathed her last. She did not wish to talk, but would put her arms around you, and kiss you, when pleased. And when her mother or some one she much loved, came to her bed, she would pat on the pillow beside her signifying she wished them to lie down beside her. While in the agonies of death she said "Oh mama, I'm so sick, so sick," All was done that could be. Neighbors came with profuse offers of assistance; but all was vain. She was deemed to become "one of the early loved and lost." It is hard to give our jewels to God; to lay the casket that contained an immortal soul in the dust. The form we so loved to see; the voice we loved to hear; are stilled to us forever. But yet if these of recurring lessons could only teach us all that the dearest object of our love may be at any moment taken from us; if we realize that they are the Lords; and only lent us for a season, and at any moment when we think not he may reclaim them; and so quicken us to a becoming interest in theirs and ours eternal welfare; then indeed we shall not have sorrowed in vain.

"Dry the tears for holy Eva,
With the holy angels leave her,
Of the form so light and fair
Give to earth the tender care.

* * * * * * * * *

All is light and peace with Eva;
There the darkness cometh never,
Tears are wiped and fetters fall,
And the Lord is Lord of all.
Weep no more for Happy Eva,
Wrong and sin no more shall grieve her
Care and pain and weariness,
Lost in love so measureless."

Doubts.

In passing along the street the other day, I heard some one say "What splendid weather we are getting now. Did you ever witness anything like this in February, B——?" "Oh," replied the other, who, by the answer he gave, we judge to belong to the doubting class. "I suppose this weather is well enough, but I am doubtful (shaking his head) if it lasts long; for I expect by the time I commence driving my wheat to market that the mud will be a foot deep. That is always my luck." And the last speaker passed along thinking himself one of the most unfortunate people living. By thus looking on the dark side he not only missed many joys of the sunny side, but his gloomy forbodings, like a pall throws a gloom over all with whom he comes in contact. He magnifies mole hills into mountains, and imaginary realites, and obstacles that men of different natures would overcome with quiet perseverance, concealing their difficulties and troubles, under a cheerful, though perhaps reserved demeanor, would probably stare him in the face until their proportions would seem gigantic, and our friend would turn back disheartened. Losing confidence in ones self is the signal for your friends if you have any to lose confidence in you,

Great events frequently result from trifling causes, and one who, instead of allowing trifles to climb upon his shoulders, until he sinks to the ground under the load, quietly places these difficulties under his feet, will find himself almost imperceptibly rising in the world. Once you have confidence in yourself others will place confidence in you, and when on the "up track" everything wears a brighter aspect. As long as you look up all will go smoothly, and the future will appear bright. Remember that in more ways than one are the words of Christ, "to him that hath shall be given" verified; and if you would be happy don't indulge in useless worrying about the past, or have any doubts about the future. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," Only make a proper use of present opportunities, and you will find every thing will go right. O. K.

AN ACUTE LADY'S ENCOUNTER WITH A NOTED HIGHWAYMAN.—Lady Browne and I were as usual going to the Duchess of Montrose, at seven o'clock. The evening was very dark. In the close lane, under the park-pale, and within twenty yards of the gate, a black figure pushed by between the chaise and the hedge on my side. I suspected it was a highwayman, and so I found did Lady Browne, for she was speaking and stopped. To divert her fears, I was just going to say, is not that the apothecary going to the duchess, when I heard a voice cry:

'Stop!' and the figure came back to the chaise. I had the presence of mind, before I let down the glass, to take out my watch and stuff it within my waistcoat under my arm. He said. 'Your purses and watches.'

I replied, 'I have no watch.'

'Then your purse.'

I gave it to him. It had nine guineas. It was so dark that I could not see his hand, but felt him take it. He then asked for Lady Browne's purse and said:

'Don't be frightened, I will not hurt you.'

I said, 'No, you won't frighten the lady.'

He replied, No, I give you my word I will do you no hurt.'

Lady Browne gave him her purse, and was going to add her watch, but he said, 'I am much obliged to you; I wish you a good night!' pulled off his hat and rode away,

'Well,' said I, 'Lady Browne, you will not be afraid of being robbed another time, for you see there is nothing in it.,

'Oh, but I am,' said she, 'and now I am in terror least he should return, for I have given him a purse with only bad money, that I carry on purpose!—Horace Walpole.

A REMARKABLE CAREER IN VILLAINY.—They have a 'gay and festive,' character in the shape of a villain, in the Bureau Co. jail. His name is Green. Some two years ago he enlisted in Chicago, got his bounty and deserted went into the country, committed a rape on a girl thirteen years old, escaped, went to Peru and enlisted again. From Peru he sailed out into an adjoining township, and under pretence of being a military officer, actually pressed a squad of citizens into his service, marched them against the village of Tonica, posted them as guards on the principal avenues leading to the place went into town, stepped aboard the cars on the Illinois Central and left his dupes to discover the sell at their leisure. He got off the cars at Decatur, stole a horse and went to Shelbyville, and enlisted a third time. Here he was over hauled by an officer, ribboned and taken back to Bureau Co. for trial, and placed in jail, sawed off the gratings to the air flues, crawled out and made his way back to Egypt, was re arrested, taken into court, where he was recognized as an escaped 'bird' from the Joliet penitentiary, was sent back, served out his term and was then again taken to the Princeton jail, to await trial on the charge of rape. When the time for trial came round, he refused to leave his cell, defied the officers to take him out, and in the melee was shot by the sheriff, the ball entering his breast and passing clear round and lodging in his back, where it was found and extracted. It is safe to say with particular reference to that fellow, 'he who is born to be hanged,' &c.—Peoria Transcript.

A Frankfort Ky. correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette says that the subject of education is receiving marked attention from the Legislature of that State. As proving that teachers as well as pupils need to be looked after, the writer mentions the fact that the following notice, written by the schoolmaster, was recently posted on the door of a school-house near Frankfort:

'Notiss.—No swarin, cursin or runnin a bowt luse or hollering in this scul.'

A West end tradesman, who for two years had vainly tried to get paid for a dozen of cravats which a young fop, suspected of living a little at the expense of confiding tradesman, had bought of him, at last sent his bill for 'A dozen fancy satin policeman.' What does this mean?' asked the fop. 'What are satin policemen?' 'They are doubtless your cravats,' was the reply, 'because they take a thief by the throat every morning.'

A man sitting on the verandah of a Western Inn, hailed one of the 'oldest inhabitants,' and inquired the denomination of a church upon the oposite side of the road. The reply was: 'Well she was a hard shell Baptist naturally but they don't run her now.'

A lady having accidently broken her smelling bottle, her husband who was very petulent, said to her, 'I declare, my dear every thing that belongs to you is more or less broken. 'True replied the lady, 'for even you are a little cracked!'

Going North.

We understand there has been and there still is quite a rage among the Rebels of this place, who have taken the oath of allegiance, to go North, and they all dread the trip to Dixie the glorious land of liberty and sunlight. What a commentary on their devotion to the cause in which they all intended to die and sacrifice their all. Many of them have done their uttermost for the rebellion, except shedding their own blood, and having, in the meantime, made large sum of money, they propose to go to the hated North to enjoy their property. Once there they will no doubt join their natural allies, the copperheads and use their money to promote the ascendency of that treasonable organization. Now, we suggest that every Rebel who goes North ought to be required before he leaves to give bond for his good behavior, to leave a description of his person and be made to designate his intended place of residence, and have a permit to go to that place only to settle. Then his description and name ought to be sent to the authorities at that place, in order that they may know who he is, and have an eye on him.—Knoxville Whig.

The thirty years' war, in the 17th century, reduced the population of Germany from 12,000,000 to 3,000,000; and that of Wirtemburg, from 500 000 to 400 000, more than nine-tenths. 30,000 villages were destroyed; in many others the population entirely died out; and in districts once studded with cities and towns there sprang up immense forests. The war of 1756 waged in the heart of Europe left in one instance no less than twenty contiguous villages without a single man or beast, Julius Cæsar in a single battle, slaughtered 403,000 Germans, Xerxes army in a single year was reduced from nearly 6,000,000 to 300,000.

A QUESTION.—At best life is not very long. A few more smiles, a few more tears, some pleasure, much pain, sunshine and song, clouds and darkness, hasty greetings, abrupt farewells—then our little play will close and the injurer will pass away. Is it worth while to hate each other?

A Yankee pedlar made love to a widow in Pennsylvania, but said there were two impediments to their union. 'Name them,' said the widow. 'First, the want of means to set up store. This was supplied, and the pedlar's store stocked. when the fair one begged for the other impediment. 'I have another wife,' replied the notion dealer.

'What,' asked the schoolmaster, 'is the term applied to the crime of possessing two wives at one time?'

'Bigamy,' replied the scholar,

'And if there be more than two, what should you call it?'

The scholar reflected a moment, then chancing to cast his eyes upon a map of Utah that decorated the wall, he smiled, and confidently answered.

'Brighamy, sir!'

A Mormon priest in Wisconsin professed a great power of doing miraculous things and compounding wonderful medicines, He made a nerve or bone all healing salve and thought he would experiment a little with it. He first cut off his dogs tail and applied some of the salve to the stump. A new tail grew out immediately. He then applied some to the tail which he cut off and a new dog grew out. He did not know which dog was which,

A brother editor says. 'To be a woman of fashion is one of the easiest things in the world. A late writer thus describes it: Buy every thing you don't want and pay for nothing you get; smile on all mankind but your husband; be happy everywhere but at home; neglect your children and nurse lapdogs; go to church every time you get a new dress.'

Dr. Dick estimated that one tenth of the human race has been destroyed by the ravages of war. According to this estimate, more than fourteen billion of human beings have been slaughtered in war since the beginning of the world. Edmund Burk estimated it at nearly three times that number.

An old lady who had been reading the famous moon story very attentively, remarked with emphasis that the idea of the moon's being inhabited was incredible. 'For,' says she 'what becomes of the people in the new moon when there is but a streak left of it?'

A rich man one day asked a man of wit what sort of a thing eloquence was. 'It is a thing,' replied the philosopher, 'which can give a rascal the advantage over an honest man.'

Waiter—'Please, sir, how will you have your steak cooked?'

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1864.
BRAHAM LINCOLN

The Quota of the State.

The Adjutant General has publish- l a list of the quotas, credits and de- iciencies in both of the Congressional Districts, and from them we gath- er a summary of the total quotas, the number of men furnished and the deficiency in each District on the 1st day of March 1864.

Total	1427

The following is a list of the counties of Blue Earth, Brown, Faribault and Martin:—

MARTIN COUNTY.
Fairmount	10	11

Waverly	7	3	4

The quota of Blue Earth county is 154. The credit to the county is 500, and the aggregate deficiency 34

The quota of Brown county, is 104, and she is credited with 108 men. Her aggregate deficiency is nly four.

Martin county has twenty-five assigned her as the quota, twenty as er credit, and a deficiency of six.

The quota of Faribault county, is 198, her credit 246, and her deficien- y 11.

It will be seen from the above that his county has already an excess of 6 men over her quota, and if this umber should be distributed or loan- l to the towns that are deficient it ould then leave us with an excess f ten.

We take from the Pioneer, of the 3th as follows:

It will be perceived that the aggre- ate amount of deficiencies in the ub-districts exceed by far the amount due from each Congressional District the State at large is not supposed to furnish an amount of volunteers greater than the proper proportion fixed by the War Department. We learn from Provost Marshal Averill, that a distribution will therefore be made of the amount of excesses furnished by the several town in proportion to the deficiencies of other towns. This distribution is not to be considered as a gift from one town to another, but simply as a loan, to make out the quota of the State. If no other draft should be made, of course it would result in a gift. But in the event of another call for volunteers or drafted men, these same excesses will be credited to the towns that now furnish them, and the present recipients will be called upon to furnish these excesses in addition to their respective quotas.

Towns in arrears can determine easily the number of men required of them under this arrangement. In the First District deduct 38 per cent, from the deficiency as given by the Adjutant General, and in the Second District 42 per cent.

The Provost Marshal states that the assignment of quotas is made by the Board of Enrollment, but it is probable they will agree very nearly with those fixed by the Adjutant General. All further enlistments are to be deducted up to the hour of drafting.

The following recruits were mustered in from the First District on and before February 29, but not credited by the Adjutant General in his assignment of quotas.

Mankato, 5; Danville, 2; Shelby, 1, and Mapleton 1.

Military Matters.

Lieut. Gen. Grant has been assigned to command all the armies of the Union.

Gen. Halleck is relieved from duty as General-in-Chief, and assigned to special duty at Washington, as Chief of Staff of the Army.

Maj. General Sherman is assigned the command of the division of Mississippi, lately commanded by Gen. Grant, and comprising the departments of the Ohio, the Cumberland, the Tannessee and Arkansas

Gen. Richardson is assigned to the command of the Department of Tennessee, recently commanded by Gen. Sherman.

Lieut. Gen. Grant will establish his headquarters in the field, with the respective armies opening under his special supervision.

Gen. W. F. Smith has been nominated for Major General of Volunteers as a necessary preliminary to his assignment to the command of the Army of the Potomac.

Gen. Grant will reorganize the army of the Potomac, and head its first movements in the field, in the spring. Gen. Smith may receive its command.

Gen. Halleck has been offered command of any department he wants.

Lieut. Col. Sanders is under arrest on charges preferred by Col. Straight disclosing to rebel authorities the plot of the union prisoners to escape from Libby prison. None of his friend have any doubt of his innocense.

Gen. Wadsworth has gone to Fortress Monroe with orders to suspend further exchanges on Gen. Butler's plan. Under that arrangement we are getting only getting 75 of our prisoners for 100 rebels.

The commission to investigate the conduct of Gen. Rosecrans at Chickamanga, fully exhonorated him from blams.

New Hampshire All Right.

The Union majority in New Hampshire is about six thousand. Gillmore the Union candidate, is elected Governor. The copperheads claimed that the State would surely go Democratic, and Republicans thought the prospect dubious. The news is so cheering we can afford to rejoice.

Secretary Chase Withdrawn

Since the action of the Ohio Legislatnre in regard to Presidential nominations, Secretary Chase has written a letter withdrawing his name from the canvass.

Explanatory Remarks of Senator Wilkinson, in reply to a Speech of Gov. Andrew, of Massachusetts.

Mr. Wilkinson. I hold in my hand, Mr. President, the Boston Post of February 24, containing a speech of Governor Andrew in Faneil Hall at the reception of the twenty-fourth Massachusetts regiment. In that speech Governor Andrew said.

"I observe with keen regret, in a congressional debate sketched in this mornings newspaper, some remarks which I might have called unpatriotic did I not believe them thoughtless, quoted from the lips of a gentleman occupying the position and who ought to say nothing unbecoming a statesman. He attempted a contrast of the soldiers of the East with the soldiers of the West. He affirmed that the eastern troops had as yet done nothing but to carry on a pendulum dance between the Potomac and the Rapidan while they of the West had beaten rebel armies and had opened the Mississippi. I need not pause to repel the taunt against the army of the Potomac."

And in a brief editorial on the first page of that paper the following language occurs:

"Eastern Troops.—We have already printed a pretty full abstract of the Governor's speech at the reception of the twenty-fourth regiment on Saturday; but in justice to eastern troops generally we feel bound to publish it in full, as reported for the Boston Journal; because it presents a manly and conclusive answer to the slur cast upon them by Senator Wilkinson of Minnesota, on the floor of the United States Senate. The Senator was sharply replied to by Mr. Fessenden, but not with that precision and array of facts which render Governor Andrew's remarks so triumphant a refutation of the calumny uttered upon brave and faithful men honorably serving their country.'

So, Mr. President, I have pretty good reason to believe that I am the Senator alluded to by the distinguished Governor of Massachusetts. His excellency, it seems, based his remarks upon what he says he observed sketched in a morning newspaper; and taking for granted that what he saw "sketched" as the report of a congressional debate, contained a full and fair statement of the debate as it took place in the Senate, he proceeded in the most formal manner, in old Faneuil Hall, the cradle of American liberty, in the presence of the brave, patriotic, war-worn veterans of Massachusetts, to arraign me for making an unpatriotic attack upon the noble citizen soldiers whom he was addressing.

Mr. President, I do not think that as a general rule it is profitable to notice here in the Senate what may be said or written of its members outside of this body; but, sir I also think that there are occasions when such notice may not only be proper but necessary, The speech from which I have quoted was made upon an occasion of peculiar interest, in the presence of the authorities of the city of Boston and of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. It was made by the Governor of that old and honored State. He was addressing war-worn veterans, whom he had two years before sent forth to the field of danger and of death to struggle, to suffer, and to die, if need be, that their country and freedom might live. They had returned covered with glory and with honor, and the doors of old Faneuil Hall were thrown open wide to receive them. The Governor ascended the rostrum, as he said, to salute them in behalf of Massachusetts with all the honors due from the Old Bay State to those of her bravest and her best.

Before, however, his excellency had fully determined in his own mind what fitting words to employ, what line of thought to pursue, in his address to the brave sons of Massachusetts, his eyes accidently fell upon a sketch of a debate as reported in one of the morning papers of Boston. It was a garbled report as the newspaper reports of the proceedings of Congress are. I should have supposed that the honored Governor of Massachusetts was perfectly aware that very little relaence can be placed upon the correctness of the meager telegraphic reports of the proceedings of the Senate. And, sir, would it not have comported more with the dignity of the high office which he so ably fills if his excellency had withheld his criticisms and his rebuke until he could have seen and read the official report of the debate to which he seemed so eager to expect?

Mr. President, to show how imperfect was the understanding of Governor Andrew in regard to the debate which he is so ready to assail, I will read from the Globe report what I said on the occasion alluded to by him, which was in answer to some remarks of the honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. Fessenden:]

"I spoke of the Army in the aggregate. I do not believe there was a braver class of men ever assembled together in an army than the private soldiers who constitute the grand army of the potomac. It is my humble judgment that the battle of Gettysburg was the greatest and most heroic victory that ever was won on any battle-field, and it was done by the stubborness and by the bravery of the soldiers."

Again, on the 24th of February last in another debate on this floor, I said:

"I believe that this army of the Potomac is just as good an army as the army of the West. In some particulars, I am inclined to think it is a better army than the army of the West. but there is one particular in in which it falls far short of the army of the West; The western army has had a man at its head who has made that army a unit. There is not a traitor nor a disloyal man in it. There is not a person connected with that army, from General Grant down to the boy who drives a wagon, that is not devotedly attached to the Union and in favor of striking the rebellion the hardest and heaviest blows they can hit it."

Mr. President, I think this is enough to show, that Governor Andrew was mistaken respecting what I said of the brave soldiers of New England. I have never entertained any prejudice against New England either as regards her soldiers or her people. I was not born in New England, but my parents were; and from them I derived such early impressions as true and faithful New England parents were likely to impart to their children.

But, sir, I did not say that I thought the army of the Potomac as an army had not been successful. Will Governor Andrew deny that? Will Governor Andrew stand up in old Faneuil Hall and justify the slaughter of Massachusetts men at Ball's Bluff? Will he stand up before the veteran soldiers whose comrades fell at Ball's Bluff when there were twenty-five thousand men within seven miles of them, and when after Colonel Diven and Colonel Baker had been ordered over the river the men under McCall and Smith were ordered back again though they stood in supporting distance of the men who had been ordered over, and justify that transaction, Will he justify the course of McClellan, who, landing on the Peninsula with one hundred and twenty-six thousand men, sat down before the city of Yorktown and there beseiged the works occupied by only eight or ten thousand men, leaving Massachusetts soldiers to dig and to die without winning for the country or themselves that glory which their patroiism demanded, and which their courage upon every battle-field has shown they were willing and able to win?

I repeat that this army has not been treated as it should have been treated. It is the most astonishing thing in the world that they should have retained their courage and discipline under all these reverses, under the humiliation and disgrace of being ordered to retreat fifty miles when every soldier knew that that army had the power to fall upon and crush and annihilate the army of the enemy. I think General Meade himself knew it.

I wish to say, with regard to General Meade, that I believe he is a patriotic man. I believe he is a pure gentleman as there is in the country. I believe he has the honor of his country at heart. I believe that he means and wishes to do his duty; but he has none of that "blundering audacity" of Grant, which will enable him to win battles and to crown his army with glory.

The army of the Potomac is not exclusively an eastern army. A Minnesota regiment fought side by side all through the campaigns of that army with the fifteenth (I think) Massachusetts regiment. I went over the battle ground of Gettysburg with the honorable Senator, from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committe on Military Affairs, a few days after the battle. As we marched toward the intrenchments of the enemy, near to the very foot of the intrenchments, we picked up knapsacks with "fifteenth Massachusetts" written upon them. I remember well that I called the attention of the honorable Senator to it at the time. and how I thought that men who could fight as those men fought that entitled to win more glory and more renown for themselves and their country than they had been permitted to do.

Mr. President, this grand army stands to-day nearly where it stood two years ago. Did I not believe that it might have done vastly more than it has done if it had been properly directed, I would not say one word; but for the honor of those troops for the honor of our country; for the honor of the brave men who have already fallen to enrich Virginia soil and whose blood has crimsoned almost every rivulet in the State. it is right that the blame of their not having advanced further should fall on the men on whom it should rightfully fall, and the country should know that while this army has not been as successful as the western army, it is not the sons of Massachusetts or Ohio, or Indiana, or Michigan, or Maine who are to blame, but it is because the army has not been managed as the grand, conquering, victorious army of the West has been managed.

A National Bankrupt Law.

We are glad to see that commercial bodies throughout the country are taking some proper and practical interest in the passage of a National Bankrupt Law. That we should be without such a law seems unaccountably strange, and can only be explained on the supposition that there is some popular misconception in regard to the nature and operations of a Bankrupt law.

The principle of bankruptcy is as simple as it is just. It is that a debtor's property belongs to his creditors, and that whenever this amount exceeds the property, the creditors are entitled to ask an equitable distribution of it among them. The debtor's property is a common fund of the payment of all his debts and under a statute of bankruptcy, that fund is put into the custody of the law for impartial and equal distribution among the creditors.—The relation of debtor and creditor is that which underlies all the work and business of society, and puts in operation the multiform machinery of trade and commerce. Therefore it is that a proper and efficient system of bankruptcy, which is especially charged with the supervision of this relation seems as essential a feature of the formation and administration of law as any of the various means employed to remedy the mistakes and disputes that arise between debtors and creditors.—Milwaukee Sentinal.

The second son of Charles Dickens, who was an officer in the English army, died in a military hospital in Calcutta, on the 31st day of January, while his father stood as chief mourner by the grave of Thackery, almost at the very hour his son was dying on the other side of the world.

Gold Quartz from Lake Superior.—We were this morning shown a fine peace of gold-bearing quartz which had been received by Dr. Chacoon from the Ontonagon District Lake Superior. The specimen shown us was about the size of a man's hand, and after being subjected to chemical tests, gold was visible in large quantities through the entire lump. It is alleged that this piece was found near the Wisconsin State line, where it is said that it was dug in large quantities.—Det. Advertiser, March 4.

General Headquarters, State of Minnesota.

Adjutant General's Office,
St. Paul, Min., March 12th 1864.

GENERAL ORDERS, NO. 8.

Having, thus far, been able to procure the proper credits for but a small number of the citizens of Minnesota who have enlisted in the military organizations of other States, owing in a great measure to the fact of our not being able to give the proper spelling of the name of the volunteer, and designation of his Company and Regiment; in order, therefore, that we may be enabled as far as possible, to overcome these difficulties, it is reccomended:

I. That Supervisors of towns, and Common Councils of cities, will procure and forward to this office, by mail or other safe conveyance, at the earliest day practicable, affidavits in reference to such volunteers, who are not known to be already credited to some portion of the State.

II. Such affidavits must give the full name of the volunteer, correctly spelled, and if his name is known to be incorrectly spelled upon the muster roll of his company, such fact and such spelling should, likewise be given, together with the number or other designation of the regiment and company in which he enlisted, and the State, under whose auspices the same was recruited.

III. Each affidavit must contain a statement that the volunteer was a citizen, or actual resident of the town claiming him, together with such known facts as go to support that conclusion, such as the length of time he was such resident, his having voted or paid his poll tax in the town, his having left his family therein, their having received assistance from the town, &c.

IV. A separate affidavit must be made for each volunteer claimed; and written upon one-half sheet of legal, or foolscap writing paper, neatly folded, with the name of the town making the claim, the name of the volunteer, and designation of his regiment and company plainly written upon the back.

V. All such affidavits must be filed in this office on or before the 10th day of May, 1864, after which time, abstracts will be made out for the several States in whose organizations such volunteers may have respectively enlisted, and such abstracts forwarded to the Adjutant Generals of States for comparison with the muster in rolls and records on file in their respective bureaus.

The names of all persons certified to by such Adjutant Generals as having enlisted from this State, will be submitted to the Provost Marshal General of the United States, and if by him found correct, they will be accredited to the towns establishing their right thereto. While we will thus secure credit for a large number of volunteers, otherwise lost to the State and the towns, yet it is not to be expected that full credit can be obtained for all that is justly our due, as the records in the offices of the several Adjutant Generals, do not in all cases contain an exhibit of residence.

By order of the Commander-in-Chief.

OSCAR MALMROS,
Adjutant General.

News in Brief.

The mails for the newly discovered gold mines in Bannock City, Idaho, are to be sent three times a week from Salt Lake City, and the contract was awarded to O. L. Alford

News from Vera Cruz March 1st, and Mexico City to Feb. 26th, had been received.

The report that President Juarez had resigned is denied in a letter by himself.

From all parts of the country came intelligence of occupation of various towns by French troops.

Hilton Head letters report firing on sumter and Charleston ceased last Tuesday. The Schooner Alice Turner a small blockade runner had run ashore on Tybee Island and was captured by our troops.

Gen. Sherman arrived at New Orleans on the 2d on the gunboat Diana. His late expedition is called by himself a "big raid" in the course of which he reached a point ten miles East of Meridian without any opposition worthy of the name, and returned with 1,000 mules 4,000 contrabands, 500 prisoners, and a large quantity of stores.

Gen. Beauregard's wife died on the 2d, and the funeral on the 4th was the largest ever held in New Orleans. Over 6,000 persons attended and the carriage train was one mile in length. Gen. Banks kindly extended to the family the steamer Nebraska to convey the remains a few miles up the river to her fathers plantation. The body was followed to the levee by thousands of ladies who wished to take a last farewell of one who was loved and esteemed by all.

The Situation

Under this caption we will be expected to state the condition of affairs in this region. We shall be brief. The situation of the town has improved in every respect, and especially have the fortifications been enlarged and improved. If the Rebels want the place let them come and take it. We shall welcome them to hospital graves, with bloody hands, wherever they make their attack.

The Rebel forces, at present, are crossing the French Broad river, some fifteen miles above this, and making demonstrations toward Maryville, which brings them within sixteen miles of here, and a little west of South. We have no information from the millitary authorities, as to their purposes but our own judgment is that they are aiming to get to Georgia by way of Madisonville and the copper mines of Polk county.

So far as our own army is concerned, it is in the right places, in proper numbers, and will escort the Rebels after the most approved style of military tactics. In other words, we shall pilot them from one station to another. Our guards are not asleep, and our friends may rest quiet.

Citizens of the town may cultivate their gardens, and preparatory thereto let them repair their garden fences, and get ready for gardening. We think it likely General Schofield will have brought on seeds enough to furnish all, free of charges. As to our farmers in the country, let them prepare to plant corn and sow oats, and we think, to a considerable extent, seed will be furnished them in due time. But one army will be allowed to occupy East Tennessee long, and the Federal army don't intend to leave now, or at any time hereafter.—Knoxville Whig.

The Baptism of Prince Napoleon's Son—A Difficulty at Rome.—The Union says that the baptism of Prince Napoleon's son "is at this moment a great stumbling block to the church. The little prince was half baptized (ondoys) immediately after his birth; but it is almost without precedent that the full ceremony of baptism should be postponed longer than six months. The infant is now more than a year old; and the reason given for the extraordinary delay is that Prince Napoleon will have no other godfather for his son than the King of Italy, who is excommunicated. The Pope making a great point of holding to the excommunication in this case, no bishop in France can be found to fly openly in the face of the church; and Prince Napoleon, with equal firmness, declares that unless Victory Emmanuel holds his infant over the font he shall not be baptized at all.'

Railroad Meeting.—A large and enthusiastic gathering of citizens was held in City Hall, on Wednesday evening last, to consider the subject of Railroads.

The meeting was called to order, and Jas. Shoemaker nominated Col. B. F. Smith Chairman, and S. F. Barney Esq., was chosen Secretary.

Mr. Willard stated that the object of the meeting was to ascertain the voice of the people, in regard to the passage of the joint resolution introduced into Congress by Senator Wilkinson. This resolution, in substance, changes the Land Grant act of March 3d 1857, and permits the company now building the Winona and St. Peter Railroad, to run their road to either Mankato or St. Peter, as may be most feasible and least expensive.

Railroad companies choose the shortest and least expensive routes over which to build their roads, and the speaker believed that the interests of the company and of the people of Southern Minnesota would be greatly enhanced by the passage of this joint resolution.

Other speakers followed Mr. Willard, all urging immediate and earnest action in the matter, and stating that a remonstrance against the passage of this resolution had been very generally circulated by St. Peter throughout the counties of Brown, Nicollet, Sibley and Carver, and that counter efforts should be immediately made.

A memorial to Congress, praying for the passage of the joint resolution, which had been drafted by Mr. Willard, was then read by the Secretary, and a committee of eight appointed to procure signers to it, and to designate persons in different counties to circulate it thoroughly.

A committee was also appointed to collect monies to pay expenses, that may hereafter be incurred.

We look upon this matter as of vital importance, not only to Mankato but to Southern Minnesota, and we are glad to see that the people are getting thoroughly waked up, and determined to leave untried no honorable measures that will aid in securing the passage of this resolution. The Company has asked for a change of this Land Grant; and more than two thirds of the people of Southern Minnesota are in favor of it, and only need to be reminded of the superior advantages that will arise therefrom, to enlist their whole energies in the matter.

Before this resolution was introduced, its opponents rested quiet in the belief that the coveted prize was pointing its head directly toward them. But now they are fearful lest it may slip from their grasp. The fact that the resolution leaves it optional with the Company to build via St. Peter or Mankato, is conclusive to every one, and especially to its opponents, that the latter is the preferable route, and the one that will ultimately be selected. As was said at the meeting, Railroad Companies do not build roads over the longest lines and in the most expensive manner, but choose the most feasible route, and avoid as much as possible the building of costly bridges over wide rivers.

If the community at large contintinue as they have commenced, by circulating and signing the memorials they receive, and support the action of our Representatives in Congress, we have no fears but that this resolution will pass.

Relief for Soldier's Families.—Monday evening a meeting of citizens was held in City Hall, to devise means for the relief of soldiers families. A permanent committee, consisting of George Maxfield, E. P. Freeman, and H P. Christensen, was appointed to look out and investigate all necessitous cases of families really in need.

The Legislature last winter, we understand, passed a law, making it the duty of the Town Board of the towns in the State, to provide for the support of soldiers families that may be reported to them, and charge the same to the town. The meeting understanding this to be the reading of the law, directed the committee to seek out all these who need help, and report to the Town Board.

We have full confidence in the judgment and discretion of the committee.

On a Leave of Absence.—It will be seen from the following letter that Captain Davy's visit to Blue Earth City was not without a purpose. We wish the Captain and his fair bride a long life and a happy one:

Blue Earth City, March 13th, 1864.

Friend Union:—I have a little item of news to tell you that may be of interest to some one. I was driving out of town last Sabbath morning, to fill my appointment at Winnebago City, and as I arrived opposite the residence of Mr. A. J. Rose, I was hailed and requested to halt and come in for a few moments. I agreed to do so for a very short time as I was in some haste. I stepped into the house, and was immediately saluted with "Good morning, Elder." by Capt Davy, who looked a pleasant as two baskets of chips. He then stepped into the other room. I began to smell a mice, and hustled off my overcoat and prepared for emergencies. I had scarcely time to divest myself of this exterior incumbrance, before the Captain returned with a fine looking lady by his side. I saw clearly what was up, and although my Confession of Faith tells me not to solemnize marriage on the Sabbath if it can easily be avoided thinks I, this is a "military necessity," and at it I went and bound them up good and strong in short order, wished them great prosperity, bade them good morning, and was soon on my way with a big green back in my pocket.

Thus you see that Capt. Peter F. Davy was married to Alzina M. Fockner, on the morning of the 13th inst, by me, and you know who I am.

Yours in haste.

J. E. C.

P. S.—Bro. Coffin, you don't get to marry all of the Captains, do you?

From Fort Snelling.—Accounts from the Fort, by private letters, inform us that there is a fair prospect of the sixth Regiment being ordered South, in a short time, and that the First Regiment will remain in the State for frontier service.

On the 11th inst. one hundred and eighty six recruits left the Fort for Dixie. Men are leaving every day who have enlisted in the various Minnesota Regiments.

Up to the 11th inst., the number of men enlisted in the several regiments was as follows:—

First Regiment, 47; Second, 151; Third, 191; Fourth, 15; Fifth, 18; Sixth, 182; Seventh, 129; Eighth, 68; Ninth, 112; Tenth; 15; Second Minnesota Cavalry, 73; Hatch's Battallion, 74; Fifth Iowa Cavalry, 58; First Minn Battery, 2; Second Battery, 14; Third Battery, 3; U. S. Sharpshooters, 6. Total, 1,248.

This number has been enlisted and mustered into the service within the past three months. It certainly speaks well for the patriotism of Minnesota sons.

River News.—At present the water in the river is stationary—neither rising nor falling. Last week it fell ten inches. There is not a sufficient stage of water for navigation, and unless we get heavy rains the time of the arrival of the first boat is far distant. The river is clear of ice in front of town.

There is four feet of water in the channel at St. Paul. Below Lake Pepin to within a mile or two of LaCrosse the Mississippi is clear of ice, and boats were to leave for Read's Landing last Wednesday.

Party at the Clifton.—One of the best parties of the season came off at the Clifton House on Monday evening. About twenty-five couple were present, and after dancing until ten o'clock, the company adjourned to City Hall, where they could have room to spread themselves. Flower got up the supper, which is sufficient to satisfy all that it was good. For a good time and a pleasant evening's entertainment, we commend you to a company like that of Monday evening last.

The Whig.—H. W. Holley, of the Winnebago Whig called on us yesterday. He will also call upon our merchants and solicit their advertising patronage. The Whig has improved a hundred per cent under his management, and our merchants will find it to their interest to seek patronage from that source.

Lost.—Last week, between the residence of Mrs. J. B. Hubbell and the Register's office, a silver fruit knife, marked "A. A. Tew." The finder will be suitably rewarded on leaving it with Mrs. Hubbell.

Grand Ball.—Joseph Guenther will give a ball at his house Wednesday evening the 28th. Tickets, including supper, one dollar each, Good music will be in attendance.

The Sewing Circle.—There will be a meeting of the Presbyterian Sewing Circle next Tuesday evening at the residence of Mrs. DuBuisson. A full attendance is desired, as special business will be brought before the meeting.

Fire.—A disastrous fire occurred on Front street in this place, last Friday night. About twelve o'clock it was discovered in the rear of Wm. Irving's Tailor shop. All possible efforts were made to remove the goods, but before it could be accomplished the building was in flames.

The adjoining building, owned by N. Woleben, was also burned to the ground, and also the one adjoining that owned by J. R. Tinkcom and formerly occupied as a Drug store.

Mr. Wickersham's dwelling house was in the rear of this building, and it, too, was burned.

Mr. Irving lost nearly all his stock and also his account books. We do not know how much he estimates the loss.

Mr. Heckman's, Jeweler, loss was about two hundred dollars.

Mr. Woleben saved his stock. The upper part of his building was occupied as a dwelling by Miss. Colburn. Her household goods were all saved, excepting the carpets.

Wm. Reid had a large quantity of furs stored in Mr. Irving's back room, among them three thousand rats. Only a few were saved.

The Hook and Ladder company did good execution in tearing down buildings, thus preventing the fire from spreading.

It is the general opinion that the fire was the work of an incendiary. There was no insurance upon either goods or buildings.

Soldiers of different Regiments are flocking in the Land Office at Saint Peter daily, taking homesteads and returning to their respective regiments.

Personal.—Dr. Wm. Frisbie and John F. Meagher, started East Wednesday morning, the former for New York, and the latter for Chicago.

Open Again.—E. Heckman, Jeweler, in the building next above the Record Office, is prepared to do business again.

On His Taps.—Mr. Woloben has purchased of Uncle Tom the building on Front Street, opposite the City Hall, and will soon have it in readiness to commence work again.

Returned.—Wesly Maxfield, Sergeant in Co. E. 9th Regt, returned from St. Paul last Friday, and is stationed here on recruiting service. He is prepared to furnish transportation to St. Paul to all who enlist in any of the old regiments.

Newspaper Change.—Mr. J. L. Christie, has purchased the Whig of '76 of Winnebago City; Friend Holley, of the Land Office, and late of the Chatfield Republican will have charge of the editorial department. He is one of the best writers in the State.

The crochet collar and gentleman's cap, found at City Hall, the owners can have by calling at this office.

Judge Branson has signed the decree granting James Cannon a bill of divorce from Mrs. Caroline C. Cannon.

Removed.—James Cannon has removed his paint shop to the room under the Union office.

The Fourth Regiment is on its way home, and will arrive at St. Paul in a day or two.

The County Board meets next Thursday the 24th inst., at the Register of Deeds office.

This number—is finely illustrated, containing sixteen elegant pages, as open and fair as any reader's eye would desire to feast upon. The "Literary Companion" is the best literary publication in our country. What is not there found of wit and humor, the best of stories, foreign and home miscellany, dewdrops of wisdom, and instruction in domestic affairs, is not worth reading or knowing. Mr. Gleason, with his long experience in the newspaper line, understands the wants of those who seek enjoyment and instruction through the medium of reading. The circulation of the Companion is very large. Terms only $2 a year. Send for a copy by all means. Address F. Gleason, Boston, Mass.

The paper is also for sale by all periodical dealers in the country at 5 cents per copy.

Books for Camp and Home.—James Redpath, Boston, announces a series of ten cent Books for the Camp Fires, of a much higher class than the dime publications now in the market. They will contain from 96 to 124 pages; new type, good paper —"neatly bound in greenbacks." No. 1 is—"On Picket Duty and Other Tales," by Miss L. M. Alcott, whose Hospital Sketches has been one of the most popular books of the season. No. 2 is Clotelle, a tale of the South," with five fine illustrations. No. 3 is—"The Vendetta,' one of Balzac's best tales, translated for the publisher. No. 4 is—Gulliver's Travels in Lilliput. No. 5 is Victor Hugoe's eloquent descriptions of the Battle of Waterloo. Each number is complete in itself and unabridged. Ten cents sent to the publisher will secure a specimen copy, postage paid, to any home or camp address—or fifty cents for the list above announced. No. 1 is out, and the five will all be published before the close of the present month. Address, Jas. Redpath, publisher, Boson.

Hostetter's Celebrated Stomach Bitters is one of the greatest strengthening preparations extant. It is especially adapted to those who are afflicted with the Fever and Ague, or any other disease arising from a disordered condition of the digestive organs. For the Fever and Ague there is perhaps no medicine in the world equal to it, as it enters, purifies and replenishes the blood, which is so important to bring about a healthy action in diseases of this nature. The Bitters are now among the most popular, and at the same time, valuable specifics in the medical world. In recommending it to the public, we are fully conscious of doing them a great service, knowing, as we do, their many excellent qualities, and sure and speedy action in all cases where the disease is caused by irregularity of the digestive organs A trial will suffice for the most skeptical. ☞ See advertisement.

All who may be visiting Mankato either for business or pleasure, especially those from the surrounding counties are invited to call and satisfy themselves. Attached to the premises are stables not excelled in the State either for capacity or convenience. The proprietor thankful for the very liberal patronage bestowed upon his house, would say to all stopping at the Clifton you will meet the same cordial and welcome reception as heretofore Farmers sustain the Clifton House and by so doing promote your own interest. A word to the wise is sufficient.

FINKLE & LYON'S

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do; will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood; and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

The world-renowned author, in this admirable Lecture, clearly proves from his own experience that the awful consequence of Self-abuse may be effectually removed without medicine, and without dangerous surgical operations, bougies instruments, rings or cordials, pointing out a mode of cure at once certain and effectual, by which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately, and radically. HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels. Cures Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Bodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dyspepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless aperient, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs. Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of bilious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally resorting to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

This Medicine increases the power of Digestion, and excite the Absorbents into healthy action, by which the Watery or Calcareous depositions, and all Unnatural Enlargements are reduced, as well as Pain and Inflammation.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

For Weakness arising from Excesses, Habits of Dissipation, Early Indiscretion, of abuse, attended with the following symptoms:—

Indisposition to Exertion, Loss of power, Loss of Memory, Difficulty of Breathing, Weak Nerves, Trembling, Horror of Disease, Wakefulness, Dimness of Vision, Pain in the Back, Universal Lassitude of the Muscular System, Hot Hands, Flushing of the Body, Dryness of the Skin, Eruptions on the Face Pallid Countenance. These symptoms, if allowed to go on, which this medicine invariably removes, soon follow Impotency, Fatuity, Epileptic Fits, in one of which the Patient may expire.

Who can say that they are not frequently followed by those "Direful Diseases," "Insanity and Consumption." Many are aware of the cause of their suffering, but none will confess the records of the Insane asylums, and melancholy deaths by Consumption bear ample witness to the truth of the assertion. The Constitution once affected with organic Weakness, requires the aid of Medicine to Strengthen and Invigorate the system.

Which Helmbold's Extract Buchu invariably does.

A trial will convince the most skeptical.

Females—Females—Females—In many affections peculiar to Females the Extract Buchu is unequaled by any other remedy, as in Chlorosis or Retention, Irregularity, Painfulness, or suppression of customary Evacuations, Ulcerated or Scirrhous state of the Uterus, Leuchorrhoea or Whites, Sterility, and for all complaints incident to the sex, whether arising from indiscretion Habits of Dissipation, or in the decline or change of life. Helmbold's Extract Buchu and Improved Rose Wash cures secret diseases in all their stages, at little expense, little or no change in diet, no inconvenience, and no exposure.

It causes a frequent desire and gives strength to Urinate, thereby removing obstructions, preventing and curing strictures of the Urethra, allaying Pain and inflammation, so frequent in the class of diseases, and expelling all Poisonous matter. Thousands upon thousands who have been the victims of Quacks, and who have paid heavy fees to be cured in a short time, have found they were deceived, and that the poison has, by the use of powerful astringents, been dried up in the system, to break out in an aggravated form, and perhaps after marriage. Use Helmbold's Extract Buchu for all affections and diseases of the urinary organs, whether existing in male or female, from whatever cause originating, and no matter of how long standing. Diseases of these organs requires the aid of a diuretic. Helmbold's Extract Buchu is the great diuretic, and is certain to have the desired effect in all diseases for which it is recommended. Our Soldier Dead.

BY DELLY ATHERTON.

"How sleep the brave who sink to rest
With all their country's wishes blest.
*   *   *   *   *   *
By fairy hands their knell is rung,
By unseen forms their dirge is sung."

When the slumberous spell of Night
Sealed in sleep my weary sight,
I heard a sound of rustling wings,
Soft as the breeze the summer brings,
And a voice whose tones were sweeter far,
Than the notes of the woodland songsters are.
And this was the song the spirit sang—
Like silver bells the echoes rung;

"Bloom brightly ye flowers in the gardens immortal,
We'll gather thy buds for the tomb of the brave;
Blow softly, O winds, thro' thy crystaline portals,
And breathe all your sweetness around his lone grave.
Baptize it, O sunbeams, with all your bright splendor!
Look down, holy stars, with your pitying eyes,
And you, ye slant moonbeams, with kisses so tender.
Weep silvery tears o'er the place where he lies.

Spring lightly bright grasses, the cold sod to cover
That lies on the form of the true and the brave:
He has fought his last battle, his life dream is over,
But we, Angels of Freedom, will watch o'er his grave.
The banner he loved shall float proudly above him,
No wave of Rebellion shall dash o'er his head,
And long shall his country remember and love him—
The hero who sleeps with our brave soldier dead."

Like the dying breath of flowers
When the frost sweeps o'er the bowers,
As the ocean's dashing spray
In the distance fades away—
Mystic form and silvery tone
Faded in the dark unknown.

Select Miscellany.

The Good Natured Man With One Eye.

About half between two small towns whose names are unimportant there is or was a wayside inn, called the Travelers Delight. Its name was probably a mistake, or it might have been a satire, since the Travelers Delight presented an aspect by no means delightful; indeed a timid traveler would have been apt to turn from it with a shudder, as intolerable desolate and gloomy; and prefer passing on at all risks, to making a trial of it.

One evening however a horse laboring under the weight of two persons, a man servant and a lady on a pillion—you must remember that it is a long time since this happened—stopped before the door of the Traveler's Delight.

'We must be wrong, said the servant, 'I don't remember any inn on the road;' whereupon he proceeded to make some inquiries of the surly-looking host, and then turned to the lady. 'We have missed the turning and are some miles from the right way. What is to be done?'

The lady—we will call her Mrs. Benson—looked at the darkening night, and shivered as a blast of wind went howling by.

'Is there accommodation for us here? But I think we had better go on.'

The servant, however, was not inclined to go on. There was plenty of accommodation for his mistress, and his horse was dead beat. As for himself the landlord said there was an outhouse he could sleep in, and he was sure his master would not like Mrs. Benson to peril her health and safety by going on in the cold dark night.

The lady suffered herself to be persuaded, and entered the house. A woman with an unpleasant face came to meet her. When Mrs Benson saw this, woman she looked again at the dark road hesitatingly, but the horse had been taken to the stable and the servant was not to be seen.

'Can I get a private room?' inquired the lady.

'A bed-room of course. But there is no sitting-room except the house-place. You'll find it warm and comfortable, and can have the best seat.'

By this time the outer door was shut and fastened, and Mrs. Benson, taking courage in the thought that at-least her servant was somewhere within call made a virtue of necessity, and accepted the offered best seat with seeming satisfaction.

Supper was placed before her, which the landlord and his wife shared at her request.

During the meal there was a violent knocking at the outer door, and when it was opened, there entered a tall broad-shouldered man, with one eye, and shock head of red hair

'Can I have a bed?' was his query.

'Well, I suppose you can, if the missis and me gives up our room. It woun't be the first time we've had to camp in the house-place, that's one thing,'

'Sorry to put you out. Thank you; I think I will take a mouthful.'

No one had invited the new-comer to take a mouthful, and as he helped himself his one eye turned on the strange lady. Mrs. Benson could not help returning the look with interest the man had such a comical face: and then his head was the reddest she had ever seen, and the whole man seemed to be jolley with an express grotesque good nature. At some surly remark of the landlord's this queer one eye looked at the lady again quickly; its owner gave a comical, sidelong nod toward the host, and then the eye twinkled as much as to say, 'He's a queer-tempered chap, you know; but don't be frightened—I'll protect you.'

In fact, Mrs. Benson felt quite a sense of security in the presence of the good-natured man, and was sorry when his huge supper came to an end.

'We'll then, I'll turn in,' he said, pushing his plate away; 'if the master here will be good enough to show me the room, for I am tired.—Good night, missis—servant ma'am.'

Then Mrs. Benson fancied that the sour face of the hostess grew sourer still; it fairly scrowled at her, but she did not feel at all inclined to go to bed. There was no alternative, however; she could not sit up all night where she was, because the master and mistress had expressed their intention of remaining there. She had asked for her servant, and was told that he had retired to the outhouse, for the night; there was no further pertext for lingering, so she accepted the repeated offer of the landlady to show her to her room.

When she got inside the room Mrs. Benson's first impulse was to lock the door, and as she did so the key came out in her hand. Not satisfied with the lock, which looked crazy, she proceeded to pile every moveable article against the door; that done she turned to the fire which was burning cheerfully. While she stood there meditating upon the insufficiency of the furniture for a barricade, the door-key which she was twisting about her fingers, dropped into the ashes. Mrs. Benson stooped to pick it up, and as she stooped, with her face bent in an upside down position a gleam of fire sent its light underneath the bed behind her. It flashed upon a shock head of the reddest hair she had ever seen. Mrs. Benson raised her head again rather quickly. The first tangible idea that presented itself in the dizziness that crept over her was to pull away the barricade, and call for help. But long before a sound could be made audible below, her fate might, and doubtless would be decided. Then she thought of professing aloud to have forgotten something which she must go to fetch, but, thinking of all the circumstances, she could not help believing the sour people down stairs to be in league with the red man, so that certain death must follow that move, even if the robber were not too wide awake to permit the ruse. She had heard of it being done, and so, no doubt, had he, and he would understand it. Besides all this she had not found the key, and somehow she shrank from bending down again to search for it. Who knew what she might encounter the next time? A knife perhaps or a pistol, or that one gleaming eye; and some startled motion might cause the robber to suspect her knowledge of his presence. No she could not look for the key.

A little while longer Mrs. Benson stood warming her hands at the fire, then she turned round to examine the position of the bed, which had been drawn down so as to leave a small space between its low head and the wall, and it occurred to her that this arrangement had been made by the robber who doubtless preferred to emerge behind, where there would be least chance of the victim catching sight of him, and so unnecessary noise might be avoided.

By reason of her little barricade on one side, and the wall on the other she would have to creep in at the foot of the bed. After thinking over her position as calmly as possible under the circumstances, she took a strong, thick, woolen scarf of unusual length, which had been wrapped over her chest for the journey, and tied behind, and putting out the candle, she got into bed yawning again audibly. The fire burned low in the grate, and the room grew nearly dark If any one could have looked into it, they would have seen on the bed a crouching figure, holding in its two hands the two ends of the scarf—one of these ends being slipped through a long loose knot on the other and a pair of large eager eyes straining upon that fatal space between the bed-head and the wall.

A clock struck down below. Mrs. Benson could hear the dull, whirling sound of every stroke in the house, and a hysterical desire to scream seized her; but just then there was a slight dragging noise under the bed, and her eyes were again fixed at that strained watchfulness The dragging came near the wall, slowly. The watcher had well calculated that the form of her terrible visitor must push itself up head first, shoulders flat against the wall and the arms comparatively pinioned. The hideous chance was that it might come up on one side or the other of the big noose waiting for it. More dragging, then a shock head above the pillow a stifled gurgling cry and the two hands of the watcher were tugging away with all their mights at the two ends of the woolen scarf.

Chancing to pass by the strange lady's door in the early morning, the sour landlady was startled by the sound of a voice uttering strange sounds, a medley of talking, screaming and chuckling. She called her husband first then the lady's servant; and after some altercation, the latter insisted on breaking open the door. A clatter of falling furniture followed and edging themselves in with some difficulty, they found the lady still in her crouching position, and still clutching with both hands at the ends of the scarf about the ghastly staring head. At the sight of three horrified faces, she burst into a fit of hystorical crying, which said my reciter probably saved her reason.

The suspicions which Mrs. Benson had conceived that her hosts were in league with the robber (as the shock-headed traveler turned out to be) was easily dissipated; and the real kindness under the landlady's sour face was proved by her unsparing attention to the comfort of her guests, until the latter were ready for their journey home.

Daring Copperhead Outrages and Murders.

Paris, in Edgar county, seems destined to an unenviable notoriety as the rendezvous of unprincipled and ignorant bands of copperheads and their fellow traitors from the South and the theater of their outrageous proceedings, Union men and there are many of them good and true, have suffered much from the miserable traitors under the lead of unprincipled men.

We learn from a gentleman from that section that for some time past the copperheads in that vicinity have made dire threats against the soldiers when the veteran regiments should return, and that they 'would clean them out,' but upon mature consideration concluded to postpone the matter until about the time the soldiers were to leave. These threats were well known to the soldiers, and consequently they have been on their guard and ready for the traitors.

It is reported that upon the plea of protecting the villainous Copperhead sheet, the Times from the soldiers, Amos Green has been storing arms in the office. It is also said that they had arms stored in a barn which they called an arsenal belonging to the Tremont House, kept by one Becker. On Saturday last, 25 or 30 Copperheads arrived in town and took possession of the barn. The fact became known to a number of the veterans belonging to the 66th and 12th regiments who had gathered there preparatory to leaving for the South and they determined to ascertain if arms were stored there etc. On arriving near the barn a man named Kenedy fired upon them, which was returned by the soldiers wounding him severely. At this stage of the proceedings Mark Boatman of the 12th infantry, approached Kennedy who begged him not to shoot as he was already wounded; upon which Boatman dropped his revolver to his side, when Kennedy shot him, the ball taking effect in the shoulder, passing downwards and inflicting a serious wound. He also fired at and wounded Lem'l Throwbridge of the 66th infantry, in the wrist, after he had begged Trowbridge not to shoot him as he was already nearly killed. After the shooting of Trowbridge the soldiers fired and Kennedy fell pierced with six or eight bullets. Previous to Kennedy's being shot, the Copperheads formed across the street to protect their "arsenal" but immediately left in wagons and on horseback, in a great hurry, the soldiers giving them a partng salute, which, it is thought, must have wounded some of them.

Our informant states that when the first gun was fired, and the 'ball opened,' as the miserable traitors called it, seven of them whose names are well known to the citizens, rode out of Greens barn, and started post haste for the country to inform their copperhead friends, and obtain assistance but had not returned when our informant left. It is feared that after the soldiers have left, the bushwhackers may return and attack the town, but the citizens it is said, are preparing to protect themselves.

Since writing the above, we have seen a gentleman who left Paris yesterday morning, and matters were quiet at that time It is thought that Boatman cannot recover.

CONSCIENCE.—How bravely a man can walk the earth, bear the heaviest burdens, perform the severest duties, and look all men boldly in the face, if he only bears in his breast a clear conscious, void of offence toward God and man, There is no spring no spur, no inspiration, like this. To feel that we have omitted no task, and left no obligation undischarged, this fills the heart with satisfaction, and the immortal soul with strength

Got his Head in a Tight Place.

Parson B—, being at the store one day was told by the clerk that he would give him a pickle jar, if he would wear it home on his head, and not take it off until he got home. The parson being a very eccentric man, said he would do it. The jar was produced, and after a little difficulty was squeezed down over the parson's head, who started immediately for home. People as they passed him, knew him. He had got nearly half way home, and was passing a crowd of men, who were mightily pleased at his appearance, but as yet no one had recognized him. Says one man: "I'll bet 'tis Deacon Mosely!" Says another "I'll bet it aint, but I'll bet ten dollars that its Old Jenks, the soap man." Others began to bet, and it was decided that the old man with his head in the jar, should hold the stakes which amounted to nearly seventy dollars. Then the jar with a man's head in it, was requested to rise, that the man might make himself known to them. "Gentlemen you will have to assist me in removing this jar. It is fitted rather snug to my head," said the individual; whereupon four men took hold of the jar and lifted so hard that the man was raised about two feet from the ground. The jar did not come off quite so easily as it went on: but after some wriggling off came the jar, and Parson B— dropped to the earth to the utter astonishment of six or eight of his own church, who looked very sheepish, and felt rather diminative, as their pastor appeared so suddenly in their midst, but no one had anything to say but the parson, and says he: "My brethren, the church is sadly in want of funds, and I think that I shall appropriate the proceeds of this exhibition for the sole benefit of the gospel;" and taking up his pickle jar, the parson started for home. The men took the jar from off the parson's head, but the parson took off seventy dollars. But he always said that when he dropped out of that jar upon the ground, that he felt considerably jarred.

Old Bachelors.

"Talk about old maids!" says a lady correspondent, "if there is anything that I perfectly abhor, it is an old bachelor. There's one of my acquaintances, for instance, (I am sorry to acknowledge the fact,) who has spent over fifty years of miserable bachelorhood, itinerating from place to place, until he has become so shrivelled and dried that his bones rattle when he walks, like an empty barrel on a wheelbarrow. His face has become of the hue of saffron, and his hair a strange imitation, of red pepper and salt. It is not Mr. Flint's fault, the reason he has never struck a match. He has been vainly endeavoring to light one at the hymeneal altar for the last forty years.—He obtained board recently at a hotel kept by a friend of mine, who knowing his forlorn condition, resolved to act accordingly. The time for retiring came, and Mr. F. was assigned to No. 74. Repairing thither, what was his surprise and delight to find, sweetly slumbering there a maid fairer to his infatuated sight than aught he had ever seen before! Long he gazed, while the hours flew swiftly by. Could he but catch a glimpse of her face—but no, that was turned away from him. He locked the door a thought had struck him—she should not escape from him now. The parson did not live far off; he would carry her there and be married before the morning revealed his age. I will not disclose further. Suffice it to say, the landlady found in the morning he had run away with a girl made out of her night-gown, a roll of matting, a broom-stick, and a pair of tongs!"

Two darkies had bought a quantity of pickeled pork in partnership; but Sam having no place to put his portion in, consented to entrust the whole to Julius keeping. The next morning they met, when Sam said, 'Good mornin' Julius! Anything happen strange or mysterious down in your wicinity, lately? Yes Sam; most strange things happen at my house yesterday night. All mystery to me.' 'Ah, Julius what was dat? 'Well Sam I tole you now. Dis mornin' I went down into de cellar for to get a piece ob hog for dis darkies breakfast, and I put my hand down on de brine an' felt all around; but no pork dar—all gone couldn't tell what bewent with it, so I turned up de barl, an' Sam, as true as preach in, de rats eat a hole claar froo de bottom ob de barl and dragged de pork all out.'

Sam was petrified with astonishment, but presently said,

Why didn't de brine run out ob de same hole!

Ah, Sam, dat's de mystery—dat's de mystery.

To plunge a young lady six fathoms deep in happiness, give her two canary birds, half a dozen moonbeams, twelve yards of silk, an ice cream, several rose buds, a squeeze of the hand, and a promise of a new bonnet. If she don't melt, it will be because she can't HARD NUTS TO CRACK.—Few people are aware of the large number of impregnable fortified works that are being constructed along the Mississippi river by our troops—mainly by our negro troops. By impregnable we do not mean that all these works are absolutely beyond the possibility of capture by any conceivable force, but simply that they cannot be taken by any enemy that could be marched or massed against them—not, for instance, by the whole military power of the Southern Confederacy, much less the combined armies and navies of France and England. The rebels indicated to us what were the strongest natural positions on the river, and some of them they made a hard effort to hold, but in each and every instance they failed for want of the proper appliances. These positions, such as Port Hudson, Vicksburg and others, have been taken hold of by our troops, and around them have been built new works, compared with which the rebel works were contemptible, while our appliances of artillery and our iron-clad naval supports add infinitely to their superiority.—We venture to say that if Jeff. Davis were to marshal all the armies of the South against Vicksburg, he could not capture it in twenty years, nor, for that matter, in twenty centuries. And there are twenty places on the Mississippi river of which the same thing might be said. We should like to enquire of Jeff. Davis what he proposes doing about it?

YOUNG BLOOD.—Gen Kilpatrick and Gen. Custer, whose exploits today are the leading theme of newspaper comment and of social remark are both of them men in the heydey of youth. Kilpatrick is twenty-eight years old and has been a widower for about a year. Custer the youngest general in our service is but twenty-four years of age, and was married only three or four weeks ago. Both of these brave young men are West Pointers, and were graduated in the same class—that of 1861. Gen. Averill who made the brilliant raid into Western Virginia, is a little the senior of these two. He is now lying in Washington with both feet suffering severely from frost-bite—During the dash into Southwestern Virginia he was at one time forty eight hours in the saddle, exposed to the fury of a bitter snowstorm and he has been disabled ever since The public, which appreciates suchgallant service as Averill has rendered, will be pleased to learn that he is recovering and will be before long once more in the saddle.—Post.

GEN. SHERMAN is described as being an inch less than six feet high, and about forty-five years old. His frame is of good size, but a moderate developement of muscle gives him an appearance of being more slender than he really is. His hair and eyes are dark—his forehead high and so exceedingly fair that, standing as it does in marked contrast with his hair and eyes, it is his prominent feature. His cheeks are marked with deep lines, while age's crow has made a very palpable track at the corner of either eye. A benevolent countenance, together with a kind and genial manner, makes him look more like a minister than the wardog he is. He was formerly Colonel of the thirteenth regular infantry a detachment of which is yet with him as a body guard. The devotion of these men to their old commander which is shown on all occasions, is not an unimportant evidence of his worth.

KNOWLEDGE OF CHARACTER.—Very great personages are not likely to form very just estimates either of others or of themselves; their knowledge of themselves is obscured by the flattery of others; their knowledge of others is equally clouded by circumstances peculiar to themselves. For, in the presence of the great, the modest are sure to suffer from too much diffidence, and the confident from too much display. Great men, however, in one respect, are to be blamed, in another to be pitied. They are to be blamed for bestowing their rewards on the servile, while they give the independent only their praise. They are to be pitied, inasmuch as they can only view things through the moral obfuscation of flattery, which, like the telescope, can diminish at one end and magnify at the other. And hence it happens, this vice, though it may be rewarded for a time, usually meets with its punishment in the end. For the sycophant begins by treating his patron as something more than a man, and the patron very naturally finishes by treating the sycophant as something less.

POPPING.—Mr. Popp of Poppvill, fancying himself very popular with his lady-love, popped the question to her under a poplar tree, when she referred him to her pops, who when asked for his consent, laboring under the influence of ginger pop, popped him out the door to the tune of 'pop goes the weasel.'

Don't Give Up.

A few days since we heard of a little boy who put on a pair of new skates for first time, and as usual in such cases, his feet went faster than his head, and he fell.

His elder brother who was skating with him, on seeing him fall and hurt himself, advised him to give it up.

'No, I shall not give it up,' replied the little fellow, 'I can learn to skate and I will learn.' and at it he went again, with an energy and determination that bade defiance to all apparent difficulties and he did learn to skate,

There thought we, is the boy who will succeed in the world. In twenty years if he lives, he will have become a man whose influence will be felt in society.

'There my young friends, is a noble lesson for you. 'Don't give up,' but rather say, 'I can and I will.'

If you have a long lesson to learn 'don't give up.'

If you are requested to write compositions 'dont give up.

If you have anything to do, 'don't 'give up,' but let your motto ever be 'I can and I will.'

OUR CHAIRS.—An eminent physician speaking of our chairs, remarks they are too high and too nearly horizontal. We slide forward and our spines ache. The seat should be fifteen or sixteen inches high in front for men, and from eight to fourteen inches for children and women The back part of the seat should be from one to three inches lower than the front part. This last is very important. The depth of the seat from front to back should be the same as the height. The chair-back is likewise unphilosophical. The part which meets the small of the back should project further forward. Instead of this at that point there is generally a hollow. This is the cause of much pain and weakness in the small of the back. The present seats produce discomfort, round shoulders, and other distortions.

STRETCH IT A LITTLE.—A little girl and her brother were on their way to the grocer's, the other morning. The roofs of the houses, and the grass on the common, were white with frost, and the wind was very sharp. They were both poorly dressed, but the little girl had a sort of a coat over her, which she seemed to have outgrown. As they walked briskly along, she drew her little companion close up to her saying:

'Come under my coat, Jonny.'

'It isn't big enough for both.' he replied.

'I guess I can stretch it a little,' she said, and they were soon as close together and as warm as two birds in the same nest.

How many shivering bodies, and heavy hearts, and weeping eyes, there are in the world, just because people do not strech their comforts a little beyond themselves!—Child's World.

THE PRECIOUS LITTLE PLANT.—Two little girls, Bridget and Walberga, went to the neighboring town, each carrying on her head a heavy basket of fruit to sell for money enough to buy the family dinner. Bridget murmured and fretted all the way, but Walburga only joked and laughed. At last Bridget got out of all patience, and said, vexedly. 'How can you go on laughing so? Your basket is as heavy as mine, and you are not one bit stronger. I don't understand it!'

'Oh!' said Walburga, 'it is easy to understand. I have a certain little plant that I put on the top of my load, and it makes it so light I hardly feel it. Why don't you do so too?'

'Indeed!' said Bridget, 'it must be a precious little plant!' I wish I could lighten my load with it. Where does it grow? Tell me. What do you call it?'

'It grows,' replied, Walburga wherever you plant it and give it a chance to take root, and there's no knowing the relief it gives. Its name is Patience.'—Herber.

FEMALE SMUGGLERS.—The Provost Marshal of Memphis, Tennessee, some days since had in custody several ladies, some of apparent respectability suspected of having smuggled goods into the Confederacy. Some strange developments were made. One had on a bolt of the finest linen, adjusted to answer the purpose of a bustle. Her corset was filled with pieces of gold coin, quilted in, to the amount of $1,200. Another had her form well rounded out with padding made of the best dress silks, worth five dollars and upward per yard. Her hose were found to conceal a quantity of gentlemen's cravats, which were swathed carefully about her legs.—The third lady's ample hoops were found to cover a number of yards of broadcloth. Her bust was filled out by a museum of articles, consisting mainly of jewelry, silk thread, needles and medicines. The fair smugglers were detained for trial.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1864.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Sioux Claims.

From a private letter received lately by one of our citizens from a friend in Washington, who is in one of the Departments, we learn "that the Secretary of the Interior is going to report on the Sioux claims next week. The report will be favorable to all except the traders. Touching their claims, he will say that he has not had time to examine them as thoroughly as he wants to, and withholds them for that purpose. I am afraid it is going to take tight scratching to pass the matter through the House. In the Senate there will be no great difficulty, or rather the difficulty will be overcome, as there is not a more presistent worker, or one of more influence here, than Senator Wilkinson."

Tunnel Under Lake Michigan.

Chicago has inaugurated a stupendous work in building a water tunnel under Lake Michigan to supply that City with water. The tunnel is to be made of brick, five feet in diameter, built in the solid clay in the lake bed, and will extend out into the lake two miles. The contract was awarded to Messrs Dull & Gowan, of Pittsburg, Pa., for $315, 139,00. Ground was broken last week.

Brother Childs, of the Wilton News in his last issue, says he was surprised to receive a copy of the UNION, as he did not suppose we would exchange with him. Not so. The News was placed on our exchange list, as we supposed, months ago; but, on correcting the list, lately, we discovered it was not there. You get up a good local paper, and it is a shame to your community that they do not give you a better support. Your efforts deserve more than you have received.

Late Southern News.

Jeff. Davis has appointed Friday, the 8th of April as a day of humiliation, fasting, and prayer. In his proclamation he says: 'Recent events awaken fresh gratitude to the Supreme Ruler of nations. Our enemy has suffered repeated defeats, and a nefarious scheme to burn and plunder our capital and destroy our civil Government, by putting to death the chosen servants of the people has been baffled. Our armies have been strengthened, our finances promise rapid progress to a satisfactory condition, and our whole country is animated with a hopeful spirit and a fixed determination to acheive its independence.'

According to accounts from Longstreet he has fallen back to Bull's Gap, which is the key to the valley from Knoxville to Bristol. There are reasons, that we cannot judiciously publish, which induce us to believe that important movements may be looked for at an early day in the Tennessee Department.

The Sentinel says:

The exchange under the cartel has not been formally resumed, but when Col. Mulford delivers our men at City point we send Federal prisoners in exchange. For every ten received we return seven Yankees, they claiming to have about three-tenths more prisoners than we have.

The Confederate official loss in Ocean Pond, Fla., battle, was 309.

Mrs. L. Knox, of Mobile, was brought to Richmond on the 9th under arrest as a spy.

The Richmond Examiner of the 10th says:

Gen. Ross reports coming in conflict with a company of negro cavalry near Canton, Miss., and killed 55 out of 70.

A letter received in Richmond reports a Yankee blockader sunk off Fort Holmes by the fire of the fort. The location of Fort Holmes is not stated.

Gen. Beauregard is in Florida. Gen. Patten Anderson has assumed command there.

McGibbon, a Federal spy, was executed at Dempolis, Ala. on the 11th,

Richmond papers have paragraphs to the effect that the funding of the debt of the Confederacy is progressing rapidly at Petersburg, Raleigh, Macon and Charleston.

A Union State Convention will be held in Madison Wisconsin, on the 30th inst., to elect delegates to represent that State in the Baltimore Convention.

The Gold Bill.

The gold bill as it has finally passed both houses, we believe is as follows,

To authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to anticipate the payment of interest on the public debt

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to anticipate the interest on the public debt, from time to time, either with or without a rebate of interest upon the coupons, as to him may seem necessary; and he is hereby authorized to dispose of any gold in the Treasury of the United States not necessary for the payment of interest of the public debt, provided that the obligation to create a sinking fund by the act of February 25th, 1862, shall not be impaired thereby.

The act referred to by the proviso, provides that the surplus coin shall be applied to the payment of one per cent. per annum on the principal of the public debt. The interest bearing public debt, is perhaps one thousand millions. It is stated that this proviso renders the bill practically of no account.

The Minnesota Valley Railroad Company.

At a meeting of the Minnesota Valley Railroad Company, held yesterday, the following officers were elected;

President—Horace Thompson
Vice President—John J Porter.
Treasurer—D. W. Ingersoll
Secretary—Alex. Johnson.

An Executive Committee was appointed consisting of Messrs. Horace Thompson, D. W. Ingersoll, John L. Merriam, Isaac Lincoln, E. B. Ames and E. W. Cutter.

We learn that the Company is organized on a solid basis, and embraces many of the most responsible citizens of the State. The Directors will proceed at once to the work of enlisting capital in aid of their enterprise, and have sanguine hopes of being able to put a portion of the road under contract the coming season.

This road is already graded to within a few miles of Bell Plaine, with substantial bridges and culverts, as we know from personal observation, and we are assured by one of our most competent engineers that it can be made ready for the track that distance at an expense of less than twenty thousand dollars.

The land grant of this company is considered by competent judges the best in the State. The lands have been selected and filed on, and when the road is completed to Shakopee the company will have a clear title to 240 sections, or nearly 40,000 acres of land—an amount amply sufficient not only to stock the road for that distance, but to complete it much farther.

There can be no question that the legitimate business of the road will pay a dividend over running expenses. The line is no the Minnesota Valley, through the richest and most thickly settled portions of the State, abounding in all the elements of material wealth, and only requiring transportation facilities to make it populous and wealthy beyond our most sanguine conceptions.—Pioneer

Governor Miller has been authorized to raise a company of sharpshooters to be attached to the Sixth Regiment.

The new call for troops accords with the plans for the Military campaign which have been laid out by Gen. Grant. It is understood he asks for large armies if the country expects him to close the war within the present year.

THE Sioux City Register of the 12th says: From reliable authority we are informed that the siege of Fort Randall, by the Sioux Indians, is being pressed vigorously. It is thought the Fort will be able to hold out until it can be reinforced.

THE Faribault Republican, takes a sensible view of the question of the shortest route through Minnesota to Idaho, That journal claims that emigrants desiring to go to Idaho by way of Thompson's Fort, on the Missouri, will save a distance of 200 miles by leaving the Mississippi at Winona and going across the State to Mankato and Fort Ridgely, instead of taking the circuitous route through St. Paul and Fort Abercrombie. An examination of a correct map will convince any disinterested person of this fact.

DESERTER SHOT.—The Henderson Monitor of Monday, has the following paragraph about the shooting of a deserter by a Provost Marshal:

Just as we are ready to go to press, we learn that Deputy Provost Marshal Bridenthal shot a man in Washington Lake township. He says that he went out to arrest Kiernan as a deserter, and shot him while he was trying to escape, while others aver that the act was unprovoked, and through sheer malice. We forbear comment until we hear furthur particulars. The taking of life should only be resorted to in extreme cases, and, where every other means fails, and he who would recklessly take the life of a fellow being is not to be envied.

Letter from Gen. Pope.

HEAD QR'S. DEP'T NORTHWEST,
MILWAUKEE, march 12th, 1864

The indications of a heavy emigration to Idaho during the coming season, across the plains and by the Missouri river, seem to render it proper for the General Commanding this Department to publish some information and suggestions which emigrants will find it judicious to consider carefully.

All information and every indication from the plains of the Upper Missouri point to a combination of the powerful bands of the Ehanktonis Sioux, (who were driven to the Upper Missouri by the expeditions of last year) with the Unkpapa and other strong bands of the Teton Sioux south of the Missouri, to obstruct the navigation of that river and to resist the passage of emigrants across the upper plains. It seems likely now that a concentration of these Indian tribes will be made early in the spring, at some point on the Missouri, above the mouth of Grand river.

A large force of cavalry, under Gen. Sully, will march against them as soon as the grass on the prairies is sufficient to subsist the animals and will give battle to the Indians, or otherwise secure peace with them. Until this expedition moves it will be unsafe for any steamers to pass up the Missouri river above Fort Pierre. The force under Gen. Sully will be strong enough to beat the Indians if found concentrated on the river. If the Indians fail to make this concentration, heavy forces of cavalry will scour the country on both sides of the river, and after driving the Indians into the interior will pursue them during the summer, and either force a battle or a peace.

It is recommended, therefore, to emigrants by water, that they communicate with Gen. Sully on the Upper Missouri river, and do not attempt to pass in advance of his forces until notified by him that it will be safe. As many as possible of the boats carrying emigrants should go together, under some sort of organization and it will be found judicious to protect the vulnerable parts of the boats, by planking them so as to be bullet proof. It is scarcely necessary to say that the navigation of the Upper Missouri river is difficult, and that the river in many places is very narrow and tortuous. Indians in ambush and under cover of the banks would have every advantage over even an equal number of whites on steamboats. By keeping in rear of Gen. Sully and only continuing their voyage up the river after he notifies them that danger is past, the emigrants will no doubt be able to prosecute their journey in safety.

Such of the emigrants as are going with trains overland from any point on the Missouri above Fort Randall, are recommended to select a point of rendezvous on the river at which to assemble as large a force as possible, and there make some organization which will place the whole body under the direction of those members of the party most experienced in Indian warfare and travel on the plains. Not less than three hundred men in a body should attempt to cross the plains at present from any point on the Missouri river above Fort Pierre. It is hoped that by the middle of the summer the expeditions against the Indians will have rendered the travel across any portion of the Upper Prairie as safe as the travel usually is in the Indian country, where under any circumstances, men should journey in considerable parties and with every precaution.

A large cavalry force will be sent out from Minnesota early as possible in the spring for the Missouri river, near the mouth of Long Lake, and emigrants from that State can avail themselves of the protection of this force if they think it necessary.

These suggestions, and this advice are communicated thus publicly that they may reach as many as possible of those who propose to emigrate to the gold regions in the summer.

It is essential to their security that they consider and act upon this advice carefully.

It is proper to repeat with emphasis that the country along the banks of the Missouri above Fort Pierre, will most likely be unsafe until General Sully passes up.

DECIDEDLY COOL.—A couple of fair but frail "helps," employed in the Nicollet House, took a notion to convert the bed sheets into skirts for their own individual benefit. Quite a number of sheets dissappeared from beds located in unoccupied rooms. The fact coming to the knowledge of the worthy proprietor, Col. Freeman, he detailed a sharp and shrewd female contraband to watch. She soon reported, and the thieves were detected in the very act of changing sheets into flowing skirts. Of course, the delinquents were sent adrift. They hail from Saint Paul. —State Atlas.

ESTIMATE.—Should the Cedar Valley Railroad be completed from this point to Faribault by the first of next November, it is estimated that full forty million feet of manufactured lumber will be shipped from Minneapolis by that line of Railroad. This estimate is no idle guess, but is based upon well authenticated inquiries by those fully competent to decide. Should these shipments take place, wonder if the St. Paul Press will claim them as part of the products of the "Bones city."—State Atlas

Receipts of the Internal Revenue.

The report of the Commissioner of internal Revenue, now in prints affords the following items in reference to the assessment and collection of revenue for the fraction of the first fiscal year, and for the first twelve months of its operation:

From the tables showing the territorial distribution of the national revenue in the United States, according to the population and wealth of each State and territory, we extract the following interesting items:

The estimate of the internal revenue is made upon a basis of 19,936,624 inhabitants in the Northern States, including Maryland, and 4,176,814, inhabitants in Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri and Louisana. The estimated wealth of the Northern States is put down at $9,760,242,461; that four States named above, $2,562,625,759. Total, $12 322,868,220. The assessment on this valuation, September 1,1862, to June 1. 1863, was, for the Northern States named. $55,474,075,74; for the four SouthernStates named, $3,809,937,75.

The collections for the same period were, from the Northern States, $34,346,237,82; for the Southern, $2,812 555,11; making a total of $36,158 792, 93. The assessment for the first year working of the law, September 1. 1862, to August 31, 1863 was, in the Northern States, $62,531,341 19; in the State of Virginia Kentucky and Missouri, $4,384,198 69; a total of $66 915.519 98. The collections for this period were, in the Northern States of Louisiana, Kentucky and Missouri. $3,630,967. 48; making total collections $47,503,441 09.

The income tax assessed for the year 1862 in the Northern States was $12,724,07; in the States of Virginia, Kentucky and Missouri it was $690, 636 57, making a total of $13.515,325 64. The excise on distilled spirits from September 4, 1862, to November 1, 1863, amounted, in the Northern States, to $6,291,719 57; in Kentucky Virginia and Missouri it was $260,676 99; a total of $5,552 396 56.

The State of Ohio bears the following part of the above. Its proportion of the population is stated at 2,339,502, being 11 7346 per cent, of the whole population in the Northern States.

Its property is set down at $1,193 898,422, which is 12 2323 per cent. of the whole. On this estimate of personal property in the State, the assessment was, for the period comprised between September 1. 1862, and June 1. 1863, $5,175,487 78. This is 9,3283 per cent. of the assessment for the Northern States. The collections in this State amounted to $3,217,480 72, being 9 6487 per cent. of the whole collected in the Northern States.

For the first year of the application of the law—September 1, 1862, to August 31, 1863—the assessment in Ohio amounted to $6,007 221 22—9,6067 per cent. of the whole; of which was collected $4,301 512. 52, or 9.8046 per cent. of the whole collections of the Northern States.

THE TUNNEL.—This subterranean enterprize is being pushed along with success. The tunnel is already finished one hundred and ninety feet. The distance yet to be completed is about one hundred and ten feet. This novel undertaking is well worthy a visit from curiosity seekers. Drop in some day, and our word for it 'Mat Ryan' will extend not only a generous welcome, but, cool your palates with a tin full of delicious "Adam's ale." Some may think this a somewhat cool reception, but still none can doubt its genuineness.—State Atlas.

The Post office address of Rev. J. O. Rich, presiding elder of this district, will hereafter be at Owatonna, he having moved his family there.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The third quarterly meeting of the M. E. Church for this district will be held at City Hall, three weeks from Saturday and Sunday

SALE OF REAL ESTATE Phillip Blatt has purchased of James B. Hubbell the lot and building occupied by the U. S. Collector, for nine hundred dollars.

ARRIVED.—The Fourth Regiment arrived at St. Paul Saturday afternoon, and were treated to a good supper and breakfast at the International. They have a thirty days furlough, and will report at Fort Snelling April 29th.

STEPHEN FIERO, of Colfax Faribault Co. advertises in the Winnebago Whig, and offers his services in the treatment of the many diseases to which horses are subject.

ACCORDING to notices posted up, there will be a school meeting in Bigler's Hall to morrow afternoon to elect a Board of three trustees for district number one.

THE LYCEUM.—This evening the last meeting of the Young Men's Lyceum will be held at City Hall. Preparations are being made for a good time. Dialogues, declamations and singing will be the order.

THE MAILS.—The mail stages for Winona and this place connect at St. Charles with the Railroad. We receive our eastern mail nearly ten hours sooner than usual. The stages leave here at 4. A. M every morning except Sundays.

DISCHARGED.—About two weeks ago a Mrs. Riant was arrested in this place on a charge of having stolen $450 from Mrs. Swatzer, of Kasota. Her person and baggage were searched, and about 300 found. She was taken back to Kasota, where an examination was had. The money could not be identified, and sufficient evidence to convict the prisoner was wanting. She was accordingly discharged and Tuesday morning passed through here on her way to Winona.

LOST.—On the 19th of March 1864 on the road from Mankato to Butternut Valley a pocket book containing about $35 in Greenbacks, besides other articles among which were a paper of needles, three Photographs and a letter from Battle Creek Michigan to Rachel Jones.

Any person returning the same to the owner will be liberally rewarded.

JOHN S. DAVIS,
Butternut Valley.

PROMOTED —Mark D. Flower, son of M. T. C. Flower, of this place, has been appointed by the Military Governor of Tennessee, Captain and Assistant Adjutant General, and has been assigned to duty with the First Brigade enrolled Militia, district of Memphis, on the staff of Col. John McDonald. Mr. Flower is a young man of more than ordinary ability, and has proved himself an efficient clerk and officer of the Government. He has secured his present position through his own individual efforts, and without the aid of influential friends. We are glad to hear of his success.

But very little wheat is now brought into town. The prices paid are fifty six and sixty cents. The prospect of navigation is so dubious, that our merchants are not disposed to purchase. The river is now only about one foot above low water mark last fall, and small boats could probably reach this place; but instead of rising it is falling every day.

SAVING OF PORK.—Capt. McKusick has in store nearly four hundred barrels of pork, one hundred of which had been condemned by Capt. Daily. Capt. McKusick had the entire lot opened last week, and but very little spoiled pork was found. Under the direction of Lieut. Ruggs, it was carefully re-packed, pickle and brine put in every barrel. Nearly two thousand dollars was thus saved to the government by the operation.

ARRIVED.—The large boiler for Reckey & Bischaber's grist mill was brought into town the first of the week from Winona. It was made in Milwaukee, and cost nearly fifteen hundred dollars. The freight on it from that place to LaCrosse was ninety eight dollars, and from LaCrosse to Mankato two hundred and fifty dollars. Messrs. R & B will soon have their mill in operation now, and then we'll have done with going to St. Peter to mill.

REMOVALS.—Mrs. Oglesby has removed her stock of millinery goods into the building formerly occupied by John Frischolz, as a saloon.

Leiberg, the accommodating and popular barber, has moved his quarters two doors above his old stand. He has now plenty of room.

John Frischolz has placed his stock in to Leiberg's old stand, and has very eligible and comfortable quarters.

ATTENTION.—We call the attention of the public to the advertisement of Dr. Huffman Operator on the Eye and Ear. Dr. H. may be consulted at the Mankato House. All those afflicted with disease of the eye or ear would do well to consult him. We clip from the Mineral Point Tribune the following notice.

Dr. Huffman, of Lone Rock, visited this place last week, to attend to cases of diseased eyes, &c. In every instance, so far as we are informed, in which Dr. H. has taken a case in hand, he has given the most perfect satisfaction. We are satisfied that the Doctor is skillful in his profession, and would recommend him to all who are troubled with diseases of the eye.

VERNON March, 23d

MR. EDITOR.—Vernon Center is just at present a little agitated on the "draft question." We claim to be just as loyal and just as anxious to fill our quota as any other town, but can't see how this latter object is to be attained. Last January the Adjutant General published his list of charges and credits, giving Vernon Center credit for 30 men and charging us with 29. This credit was less than the number of men actually furnished; but let that pass. Since that time at least five bonafide residents have enlisted, or re-enlisted from this town, and we are now only credited with twenty five men. Now if you can tell us how five added to thirty makes twenty-five, or how we can raise our quota when such is the —"modus operandi,"—you will satisfy our curiosity if nothing more.

I might add that we feel considerably inclined to "pitch into" Garden City for claiming men who never were residents of that town for an hour, and who did not enlist from there. Garden City has received one diploma for superior penmanship, and now give her another for tremendous swearing.

LIFE OF GENERAL B F. BUTLER.—T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia, Penna., have just published the life and public services of Genearl Butler, the hero of New Orleans, with particulars of his early life, his career as a lawyer, and all his celebrated orders since he has been an officer in the U. S. Service. This edition is full and complete, and is destined to have a very large sale. With his portrait complete in one large volume, price 25 cents. Sent post paid to any address on receipt of 25 cents. Price to canvassers, $1.75 a dozen, or $12.50 a hundred, sent on receipt of the money.

NO DEBATES.—The Globe of March 9th did not contain any proceedings of Congress, on account of the compositors being worked out,—they having worked twenty-three out of twenty four hours the day before, and no other help could be obtained. The Globe now pays sixty cents per 1,000 ems.

The Winona Republican has the following in regard to the stage line from that place to Mankato. "It may be stated in this connection that the Winona and Mankato stage route, now in the hands of Messrs. Burbank & Co., will be stocked in the most complete manner for the summer travel. Four-horse Concord coaches will connect with the railroad train from Winona, going through to Mankato from this city in about twenty-four hours. This will henceforth be the greatest line of interior travel in the State, and Burbank & Co., will do their utmost to meet all demands upon them in the most satisfactory manner.

A DESPERADO CAUGHT. The Press gives a lengthy account of the arrest of one of Quantrell's guerrillas, named Vandervere, in St. Paul a few days ago. He was one of the gang that sacked the town of Lawrence, Kansas, last August. The arrest was made by Major Allen, of the 6th Missouri, and Lieutenant Pickett, of St. Joseph, Mo.

Heavy Robbery of a New York Dry Goods Store.

The extensive dry goods firm of Messrs. H. B. Claflin & Co., on West Broadway, have for a long time past been aware that goods were being stolen from them in small quantities, but could not ascertain in what way.—Every possible artifice was resorted to, but without success and they finally called in the aid of the police.

Captain Jourdan of the sixth precinct, together with officer Golden also of the sixth, took the case in hand, and succeeded very soon in unraveling the mystery. From the labors of these officers it was shown that seven porters and one clerk, employed by the firm, had organized a system by which the goods could be taken and conveyed away without detection. About fifteen thousand dollars worth of goods were stolen in this manner before the speculators were discovered. The matter was so well managed by the police that all the suspected parties were taken into custody.

They gave their names as John Rogers, Fredrick Riley, Edward Cushing, John McCutcheon, Daniel Egenlon, James Kay and Tobert Strong, porters and Edward Inuet clerk. Rogers, Riley, Cushing and the clerk pleaded guilty to the charge of grand larceny. Rogers made partial restitution by paying back his late employers $700 Strong paid back $85. and Cushing $350, the proceeds of goods stolen by them and sold. $500 worth of the stolen goods were found at No. 92 President street Brooklyn. $1,000 worth was found at 136 West Broadway. The police anticipate finding still larger quantities of goods. The parties were all taken before Justice Dowling and committed for examination.

EXACTLY.—We are daily importuned with questions touching the quotas and the draft. 'You newspaper men,' say these anxious questioners, 'read all the orders of the A. A. S.'s, and the A. A. G.'s; tell us now, when is the draft going to come off, and what is the exact quota of our town?'

To these inquisitors we might truly say, like Artemas, in his famous 'Ghost' lecture, about the War. Says he: After watching all events, reading all the editorials, scanning all the telegraph columns from day to day buying military maps as fast as they come out and studying them, forming the acquaintence of real Generals, talking with neighbors evenings, subscribing for the London Times and Paris papers, with one eye fastened on Washington, another on the various States conventions and war meetings—he'd be d—d if he knew anything about it'—City Post.

FINKLE & LYON'S

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do; will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood: and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Bodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs. Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of billious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally resorting to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists. Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 33

HELMBOLD'S.

Genuine Preparations.

COMPOUND Fluid Extract Buchu, a Positive and Specific Remedy for diseases of the Bladder, Kidneys, Gravel, and Dropsical Swellings.

This Medicine increases the power of Digestion, and excite the Absorbents into healthy action, by which the Watery or Calcareous depositions, and all Unnatural Enlargements are reduced, as well as Pain and Inflamation.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

For Weakness arising from Excesses, Habits of Dissipation, Early Indiscretion, of abuse, attended with the following symptoms:—

Indisposition to Exertion.	Loss of power,
Loss of Memory,	Difficulty of Breathing,
Weak Nerves,	Trembling,
Horror of Disease,	Wakefulness,
Dimness of Vision.	Pain in the Back,

Universal Lassitude of the Muscular System, Hot Hands, Flushing of the Body, Dryness of the Skin, Eruptions on the Face Pallid Countenance These symptoms, if allowed to go on, which this medicine invariably removes, soon follows Impotency, Fatuity, Epileptic Fits, in one of which the Patient may expire.

Who can say that they are not frequently followed by those "Direful Diseases" "Insanity and consumption." Many are aware of the cause of their suffering, but none will confess the records of the insane aslyums. And melancholly deaths by Consumption bear ample witness to the truth of the assetion. The Constitution once affected with organic Weakness, requires the aid of Medicine to Strengthen and Invigorate the system.

Poetry.

Brave Boys are They.

Heavily falls the rain,
Wild are the breezes to-night.
But 'neath the roof, the hours as they fly
Are happy, and gay and bright.
Gathering round our fire side,
Though it be summer time,
We sit and talk of brothers abroad
Forgetting the mid-night chime.
Brave boys are they,
Gone at their country's call
And yet, and yet, we cannot forget,
That many brave boys must fall.

Under the homestead roof,
Nestled so cozy and warm
While soldier's sleep with little or naught,
To shelter them from the storm;
Resting on grassy couches,
Pillowed on hillock's damp,
Of soldiers fare how little we know
Till brothers are in the camp.
Brave boys are they, &c.,

Thinking no less of them,
Loving our country the more,
We sent them forth to fight for the flag,
Their father's before them bore.
Though the great tear drops started,
This was our parting trust:
God bless you, boys, we'll welcome you home,
When rebels are in the dust.
Brave boys are they, &c.,

May the bright wings of love,
Guard them wherever they roam.
The time has come when brothers must fight,
And sisters must pray at home.
Oh! the dread field of battle,
Soon to be strewn with graves.
If brothers fall, then bury them where
Our banner in triumph waves.
Brave boys are they, &c.,

LILLY MARTIN'S
THREE DOLLAR BILL.

BY ANNA GREENWOOD.

On Lilly Martin's birth-day—Lilly was just fifteen—Uncle John wished to make her a present of something, and went down into the village to see if he could find anything to suit his fancy. After looking at bead bags, gold pencils, books, and all sorts of bijouterie, the old gentleman's orderly mind was thrown into such a state of indecision, that he gave up in despair, and went home without buying anything.

'I'll give her the money and let her go and suit herself,' he said, with a feeling of relief; 'for I don't know what to get.'

And Uncle John, acting according to the decision, slipped a three dollar bill into the hand of Lilly, and told her to spend it for a birth-day remembrance.

On that evening when the family was assembled in the little sitting-room—all but Uncle John, who was in his own chamber, where he always had a fire in cold weather—Lilly told about her three dollar bill.

'What are you going to buy?' asked her brother William,' a young man of twenty, who had just come home from college, full of the dignity of learning.

I'm going to take the Lady's Book replied Lilly; 'it's just three dollars a year.'

'Nonsense!' said William tossing his head contemptuously.

'You'd better throw your money into the fire,' said Aunt Edith.

'What do you want with the Lady's Book, pray?' inquired Mr. Martin, disapprobation in his voice.

'It's full of beautiful stories,' replied Lilly; 'I've seen it at Susan Glenn's.'

'Lovesick nonsense!' ejaculated William.

'And oh! such sweet pictures! said Lilly. Every month there are one or two fine engravings, and plates of colored fashions, and music and I don't know what all.'

'Plates of fashions!' broke in Aunt Edith. 'A nice little girl you are, indeed to want plates of fashions.'

'A mere Milliner's Magazine!' fell sneeringly from the lips of William. 'I wouldn't let it come into my room'

'I would spend my money for something else, child,' said Mr. Martin.

'And so would I, dear,' more kindly spoke her mother.

'But Uncle John gave me the money to spend for just what I wanted, persisted Lilly; 'I don't care for any thing in the world but the Ladys Book.'

'But, Lilly,' said William, gravely,' its the merest whip-syllabub affair in the world. Nothing in it but silly love-stories and wishy-washy poetry. Better go and buy some good book if you want anything to read.'

'How do you know there is nothing in it but love-stories and wishy-washy poetry?' inquired Lilly with some spirit.

'Because I do,' said William.

'But how do you know? Have you ever read the magazine?'

'Me? No, indeed!' And William gave his head a contemptuous toss. 'Do you think I'd waste my time over your Lady's Books?'

'Then how do you know so well what is in it?'

Lilly was no fool, if she was but fifteen; and she had no idea of letting William have it all his own way and put her down by a mere say so.

'Know?' replied William. 'Don't everybody know all about your Milliner's Magazine? How anybody can bear to read the stupid nonsense it contains, is more than I can understand.'

If I were your father,' said Aunt Edith, 'I would forbid any such disposition of your money. I wouldn't let the miserable thing come into the house. In a little while we'll have your head filled with love and nonsense, fashion and foolery.'

Mr. Martin did not respond to this. As long as Uncle John had given the three dollar bill to spend as she pleased, he did not just feel authorized to take Aunt Edith's advice, seeing that the objections against the 'Book' were not made on the ground of its morality.

A great deal more than is here given was said on all sides; and it is doubtful if the 'Book' ever got so severe a handling, even from the would be 'tickle-me-and-I'll-scratch-you' literary lordings of the day who hold their upright position, not in individual strength and excellence, but like sticks daintily balanced against each other.

Lilly Martin, however, had a will of her own. The more they condemned and ridiculed the Book the more bent was she on having it. On the very next day she went to see Susan Glenn, and talk to her about the matter. Susan told her to write a letter to Mr. L. A. Godey, in Philadelphia, inclose her three dollar bill in it, and ask him to send the Lady's Book.

'I'll do it,' said Lilly Martin. And she asked Susan to let her have a sheet of paper and a pen. The letter was soon written and the money inclosed. As Lilly went home she took the post-office in her way, and dropped the letter in herself.

'What have you bought, Lilly?' asked Uncle John, as his niece came into the parlor where he was sitting on her return home.

'I've subscribed for the Lady's Book,' replied Lilly.

'Why, Lilly!' said Uncle John in a tone of surprise, 'the thing is not worth having. I read in a paper the other day that it was a mere trifling mawkish affair, fit only for silly girls to read.'

'It'll just suit me then you know uncle,' retorted Lilly, smiling.

'No, but, dear; even a young girl like you ought to read what is natural, sensible, and healthy.'

Lilly argued her point, but the odds were against her, for everything was bold assertion, and she had no proofs at hand to set off against them.

In due time Lilly's letter reached the publisher, who promptly dispatched the magazine. On its arrival, there was a general expression of disapproval; but, strange to say, notwithstanding Lilly's three dollar bill had produced the 'Book,' it was monopolized first by one and then by the other so entirely that the day passed before she could have it all to herself.

'This is the precious affair,' said William, taking almost by force, the number out of Lilly's hand after she had torn off the envelop. 'Let me see what it looks like. Lady's Book! Humph! Two geese swimming in a mill pond. Capital design! Or, a pair of billing and cooing doves would have done as well Plates! Let us see what they are like. Lobster sauce! Ha! ha! ha! That is good! Ha! ha! First rate! Just look!'

And William held up the graphic, but laughable plate of a cat caught by a lobster in attempting to steal a fish from a larder.

All laughed heartily at the plate, which put them in a better humor and their heads formed a knot, as the further embellishments of the number were examined.

'Beautiful!' said Mr. Martin as Wandering life in the East was displayed.

'Beautiful!' said Aunt Edith.

'A very pretty picture,' said William.

'Two pages of music,' remarked the brother as he turned a leaf. 'Fashions!'

Aunt Edith shook her head gravely.

'Isn't that sweet?' broke forth Lilly, unable to repress her admiration.

'Church of the Advent in Philadelphia,' said William, reading the title of the next picture. 'A fine old Gothic structure,' he added, 'and really an embellishment.'

After the plates, model cottages, and other embellishments were examined, William felt a very natural desire to look a little deeper into the 'gingerbread' affair, as he had called it, and without so much as saying to Lilly, 'By your leave, sister,' sat down in a corner of the sofa and was soon buried in the number. Sometimes he would laugh out involuntarily, sometimes pause and lift his eyes thoughtfully from the page and sit in a musing attitude for some moments and sometimes ejaculate—'First rate!' without being unconscious he had listeners.

'What is 'first rate,' William?' asked Aunt Edith, on one of these occasions, who, strangely enough, experienced a fidgety desire to get hold of the attractive-looking magazine; and with difficulty refrained from asking William to read aloud.

'Why, Parsons Scrantum,s Donation Party,' replied the young man, laughing aloud.

'What? asked Aunt Edith, with an irrepressible smile breaking over her face.

'Let me read it for the benefit of all. Oh! it is so good!' And William read as gravely as he could, 'Aunt Magwire's Account of Parsons Scrantum's Donation Party.'

'What nonsense!' said Aunt Edith, laughing in spite of herself, when William finished the story.

'It's the kind of nonsense that tells home, though, where it is meant to hit,' replied William, forgetting his recent contempt of the wish washy and lovesick nonsense contained in the 'Book.'

'But it isn't the right kind of reading to do people good,' objected Aunt Edith.

'If it makes them repent of past wrongs, and resolve to do better in future, it does good,' said William. 'But I find a great deal here that I had not expected to find. So far, there are no lovesick stories, and a great deal of solid, thoughtful, instructive reading. There is a part here that the editress, Mrs. Hale, calls 'The Treasury,' in which are some choice old things. And here is an admirable article on 'the Arts of Design, and their Influence on the Mechanic Arts of this Country,' which father will read with inerest and profit. I am sure I didn't expect to find such a paper here.

And so William went on reversing his opinion given in advance, and founded upon a mere prejudice, for about an hour. During the afternoon, Lilly had an opportunity to read the 'Book,' when she paid her compliments to Mrs. Neal and to Mrs. Hale.

When Lilly came into the parlor after tea, she found Uncle John, close to the light, bending over the Lady's Book. For an hour he continued reading, and then taking off his spectacles, and leaning back in his chair, said—

'Well! There really are some excellent things here. This paper on 'The Old English Essayists' is capital; and 'Ideas Picked up on the Sea Shore' are full of thought. Just listen to this.'

And Uncle John replaced his spectacles, and opening the 'Book,' read —'Of all the ruins on which the eye of man can gaze, or on which his memory can dwell, none are more painfully sublime than the ruins of humanity. And what are they? Not the deep furrows which time ploughs on the cheeks, nor the silvery whiteness with which years cover the head —nor the curved spine, which bows the face to the earth, as if looking for a grave to rest in; for the wrinkled cheek, and the blanched head, and the stooping frame, and the appropriate accompaniments of old age, are as beautiful in the system of life as winter with its leafless trees and frozen streams in the system of the seasons; but the ruins of humanity are seen in wrinkles which time has not made, in a frame trembling with anxiety, shaken by sorrow, humbled by sin, withered by despair—where the beauty of youth is gone, and the beauty of age has not supplied its place, 'tis as melancholy as snow in the harvest.'

'How true! how eloquent!' said Aunt Edith.

'And again,' resumed Uncle John. 'Wonderful are the powers of the microscope, opening to our eyes a new world of being, and bringing us acquainted with forms and modes of existence of which, heretofore, we had no conception or apprehension. But, is there no moral microscope, by means of which we may look more deeply into the human heart, and see more closely the current of human thoughts, and the workings of human feelings? Yes, sympathy —by means of which humanity is opened to us, and we are brought to the knowledge of mental emotions and characteristics quite as interesting, and as much, generally overlooked, as those forms of physical existence which are revealed to us by aid of the microscope; and thus we learn, that the moral world is as full of active thought and feeling as the material world is of curious and beautiful forms of existence.'

'Excellent!' fell from the lips of Mr. Martin. 'Why, is that in the Lady's Book?'

'That's lovesick nonsense!' spoke up Lilly, turning an arch look upon her brother William.

Uncle John, after reading the little extracts just quoted, opened the magazine in another part, and said with a smile—

'A Tipsy Parson!' Why, what's this?'

All became silent with interest, and Uncle John read the story aloud. The listeners were as grave as the assembly of deacons that sat on the case of Rev. Mr. Manilus, until the denouncement came, and then there was as free a gust of merriment as distinguished that grave body when the 'tipsy parson' at Mrs. Reedside's party turned out to be only a sponge cake soaked in brandy.

'Capital!' said Mr. Martin.

'First rate!' said William.

'A funny affair!' said Aunt Edith. While Lilly laughed, more for joy finding her Lady's Book so highly approved, than at the humorous incident just read.

'Heroic Women of the Revolution,' said Uncle John, reading from another page of the 'Book'—'Mrs. Hannah Erwin Israel.'

'Who?' quickly asked both Mrs. Martin and Aunt Edith.

'Why, Hannah Erwin Israel,' said Uncle John.

'Indeed! You know how often our mother used to speak of her,' remarked Mrs. Martin.

'What about her? Read it, brother,' said Aunt Edith, manifesting a good deal of interest.

Uncle John read the intersting naritive, to which all listened with the liveliest interest.

'It's just as mother used to relate, almost word for word,' said Mrs. Martin.

'Who would have thought to find that in the Lady's Book?' remarked Aunt Edith.

'Why not in the Lady's Book?' asked Lilly.

'Oh, because—because—'

'Because you didn't know anything about how interesting a magazine it was,' said Lilly, with an air of triumph. 'It seems, after all, that my three dollar bill has not been thrown away.'

Uncle John smiled at Lilly's home-thrusting remark; but no one else gave any evidence of having heard it, except her father, who said—

'I don't see any harm in the magazine, It appears to be amusing and interesting enough, though it doesn't seem to contain anything very solid and instructive.'

'It's only a Lady's Magazine, you know,' replied Uncle John, 'and, as such, appears to be a really excellent work. As to being instructive, I think it is very decidedly so, from what little I have seen of it; and if ladies acquire a taste for the kind of reading it contains, there isn't much danger of their getting a great deal of lovesick nonsense in their heads. Mrs. Hale, the editress, who is well known to be a woman of taste, discrimination, good sense, and good principals, produces a work, I am really glad to find, of a high order. The fashion plates are not to my taste; though this is nothing wonderful, for I am an old bachelor but, as the work is more particularly designed for ladies—and they may not only be excused, but commended for paying a proper regard to the fashions—these illustrations of the prevailing modes are well enough, and don't hurt the good reading in the 'Book' for any one.'

And thus this single number of the magazine worked its way, by the force of its own intrinsic merit, into the good opinion of a family, every member of which, but one, had prejudged and condemed it. For a whole week there was scarcely an hour in the day that somebody wasn't poring over the 'Book.'

Mr. Martin was the owner of extensive print works in the neighborhood; and his goods were known in market as excellent in quality, and the colors brilliant and well set. And there was an establishment a few miles off, with a reputation the reverse of this, the goods from which always went off more freely than Mr. Martin's. The cause remained a mystery to the father of Lilly, although he had often reflected thereon. His plain, straight-forward, unimaginative, unsuggestive mind, had not been able of itself to see that the whole secret lay in his neighbor's superior taste in selecting and getting up his patterns. He looked, mainly, to the quality of his work; his neighbor to its appearance. If Mr. Martin had possessed equal taste, or had employed a designer of the highest abilities his goods would in a little while have been far in advance.

One evening, several days after Lilly's magazine came into the house, Mr. Martin took up the number which, by this time, had been pretty thoroughly read by all, and turning over its pages, soon had his attention arrested by an article of graver import than he had expected to find. After reading it very carefully, he sat and thought for some time. Then he got up, and putting his hands behind him, walked the floor with an abstracted mind for a quarter of an hour at least.

'Well!' he at length said, pausing, and speaking with the tone of a man who had fully settled some question in his mind, 'I've learned something to night that, if I had learned ten years ago, would have put, by this time, ten or twenty thousand dollars in my pocket.'

'Indeed!' remarked Uncle John, and

'Indeed!' said his wife.

'Yes, and there is no mistake at all about it. Did you read that article on the 'Arts of Design, and their Influence on the Mechanic Arts of this Country!'

I glanced over it hurriedly,' replied Uncle John.

'Then do you read it attentively It is admirable; and contains just the suggestions that I have all along needed, and which I now wonder never came to themselves into my mind. I have had, in my establishment, too little regard for taste in designs, and that is why goods, in every way inferior to those I turn out, have been sold over my head again and again. No matter at what expense, I will have an artist of the first ability, if I send to Paris for him; and he shall be a permanent fixture in my works, and considered as necessary as an engineer or a compounder of colors. There shall be no more getting up of patterns by a mere mechanic, whose opportunities have been few, but by a well educated artist, fully imbued with the principles of taste, and able to keep up with the improvements of the day. Listen to this.'

And Mr. Martin took up the magazine and read—

'We would strongly impress upon all who are engaged in the mechanic arts how important it is to introduce into their articles the principles of good taste and a knowledge of artistical effect, as it is, evidently not so much the material which gives value to the product, as it is the traces of intellect which are apparent in their design, and the mechanical skill which is exhibited in the execution of it. In fact it is to design and skill that the richest gems which were once buried in the bosom of the earth, owe their chief luster and their commercial importance; and, in products of cotton, wool, iron coal silk or, by far the greatest value is given to these substances by the ingenuity and industry which are applied to their developement into new forms and conditions.'

Mr. Martin then laid down the magazine, saying—

'And throughout, the whole article is admirably suggestive. I doubt very much if any periodical in the country, no matter what its pretensions, can show any article that so admirably combines interest, instruction and beauty of style.'

'I must agree with you there,' remarked William. 'I read most of the higher order of magazines, as they assumed to be, while at college and I must own, that an article combining all the pre requisities of excellence so fully as this one, I rarely met. And I will also say, that this the first number of Lady's Book which I have ever read, will not suffer the comparison with any magazine published in the country, I don't care what may be its pretension Good taste is seen on almost every page; and amusement and instruction are so happily blended, that your fancy is ever kept in lively play, while your judgement is strenghtened, your false views corrected, and your errors made apparent without wounding your self-love, and thus binding your moral preceptions.

'Lilly's three dollar bill has certainly been well spent.'

'Indeed it has, said the father.

'By the time Lilly's wedding-day comes I hope to be so much better off than I am now, in consequence of her investment as to be able to build her a handsome cottage after one of Mr. Godey's models, which are regularly furnished, I see, in his 'Book.'

Lilly blushed and looked happy.

On the next day Mr. Martin wrote to a correspondent in New York, to procure him an ornamental artist of the highest ability, if one was to be had in the city, Whether he has obtained one or not I have not learned. But he is in earnest about it, and fully resolved to send to London or Paris if one of the right stamp cannot be procured in this country.

The next number of the 'Book' is looked for with interest by every member of the family, and there is some talk of sending for the back numbers for a year. This will probably be done.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.—Richd. Chute Esq., of St. Anthony, exhibited to us the other day a substitute for either wool or cotton. The specimen was taken from the stalk of a plant indigenous to the 'Big Woods,' which embraces a large portion of this County, as well as several other Counties lying west of Hennepin. The plant indicated is a species of nettle. It is found in enormous quantities in all parts of the Big Woods, and can readily be cultivated to any extent. It grows from three to six feet in heighth.

Mr. Chute procured a sample of the fiber taken from the stalk of this plant, and while east had scientific tests applied with most gratifying success. While it can readily be carded and used separately in the manufacture of heavy goods can with equal facility be cottonized, and worked in with either wool or cotton, in the manufacture of the finer fabrics. When carded, it looks very much like prepared flax. There can be no doubt that this discovery will eventually prove of a value to the 'North Star State.' Any person desiring additional information, on the subject will do well to call on Mr. Chute. —Atlas.

What Illinois has Done.

Illinois has done nobly. Adjutant General Fuller has just furnished to Governor Yates a statement of the enlistment, by which we learn that the total calls upon the State including that of Oct. 17th, '1863, were 145,100 men, against which the War Department credited us with 140,641. leaving a balance against us of 4,459 men on the 18th of October 144;086 men reducing the balance against us at that time to 1,014 men. The enlistments from October 18th, 1863, to January 1864, assuming the deficit presented by the War Department, show that the State on the commencement of the New Year had filled all her calls, leaving a clean sheet for future operations. Taking the figures the Adjutant General foots up, and the State commences the New Year with a balance of four or five thousand in her favor. Add to this the enlistments in January and February to date, and the re-enlistment of forty-six old regiments, and the State is nearly clear of the draft even taking into account the new call of 200,000

Freddys Prayer.

A bright eyed boy of four years was saying his prayers the other night to his mother, and with hands folded and eyes closed, he sweetly said;

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep:
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take.
God bless my papa, mama, and"—

He stopped all at once, opened his eyes and exclaimed:

'Mother, mother, what shall I say if I've been a bad boy?'

'You should not stop to ask questions my son, while you are saying your prayers,' replied his mother.

'But, mother, if I've been bad, what shall I say?'

'Ask God to forgive you, but you should say your prayers all through when you begin, without stopping.'

His question answered, he reverently folded his hands, and, closing his eyes again, continued:

'And will God forgive me for killing a hop toad with a big stick, and throwing him down a deep hole? Amen.'

Children of a larger growth will do well to copy.

TOO GOOD TO BE LOST.—In passing the Post Office yesterday, a little urchin was yelling out at the top of his voice, "'er's your Times all about the battle. An officer of the pompous character happening to be near, purchased a copy, scanning it over in search of the account of the battle; not finding it, he turned to the boy saying in an angry tone. 'Here you little cuss, I can't see anything about the battle.' Youngster looked up at him a moment and replied quite coolly, 'Perhaps not, and I don't think you ever will until you return to your regiment.' The officer vamoosed, amid the shouts of laughter from the bystanders.

A witty fellow happening to step in a little ale house one day, called for a glass of the refreshing beverage. After drinking it he said to the landlady, with the air of one who has some great secret to communicate, 'Mrs. D., I can tell you how you can sell a great deal more ale than you do.' 'How is that?' she asked. 'Dont sell so much froth,' was the reply.

The Weekly Union.

United States Official Paper.

Mankato. Friday, April 1, 1864.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1864,
ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Commissioners to Receive Soldier's Votes.

The Mankato Union newspaper recently made an unwarranted attack on Andrew C. Dunn, Esq., in which the sterotype abolitionist epithet "copperhead" was used and worse insinuated Mr. Dunn, who resides at Winnebago City, having recently been appointed by the Governor to take the vote of the regiments and probably the mankato paper utters the bile of some wounded aspirant. Mrr D. is the attorney for this district, nominated and elecled by the Union men of Faribault County, and all such charges as are insinuated by the Union fall harmless at his feet. The action of the Governor in his appointment is eminently sound and praiseworthy as the result will prove. Is there not at least a slight tincture of secession in these times to be railing at the appointments and other acts of our officials in times like the present?—Blue Earth City Advocate.

Our article did not contain the word "Copperhead" in a single instance; and again we have made no "unwarranted attack on Andrew C. Dunn." In the article to which the Advocate refers, we censured Governor Miller for having proved unfaithful to his politicial friends—those who were most zealous in their support of him last fall—and for not appointing the same number of Republicans as of Democrats, in the list of Commissioners. The other districts are fairly represented by a Republican and Democrat in each, and we considered it but just that this section should also be fairly dealt with. We have had no "bile of some wounded aspirant" to utter, because we had no candidate for the position.

So far as Mr. Dunn is personally concerned, we regard him as a social, agreeable gentleman, competent to fill the office he has held and now holds; but, politically we look upon him as a Democrat of the secession stripe, and the editor of the Advocate will have to reside in Faribault County a longer period of time than he has yet before he can convince us to the contrary. It would be more to his credit if he would spend his time in studying his grammar, than in writing about matters of which he is ignorant. His antecedents are too well known for him to talk about a "tincture of secession."

Why does he not vent his spleen on the members of the House of Representatives, who, by electing Mr. Dunn Clerk of the House, practially endorsed him as a good Union man, instead of blaming Gov. Miller for appointing a man thus recommended by the House, as a commissioner to receive the soldier's votes. We do not wish to be understood as endorsing Mr. Dunn's Unionism, but we do say that if he was good enough Union to be a proper Clerk of the House, it seems to us he is also fit to receive soldier's votes.—State Atlas.

We don't consider the recommendation of the House worth a rush. Its talent combined, would not equal that of a school boy of sixteen. And if Gov. Miller's future acts are to accord with this recommendation of the House, we hope they will "grow small by degrees and beautifully less."

In the same number our Representative Hon. J. A. Latimer is complimented as having performed his duties acceptable saving in one thing, to wit: "trying to change the boundry line of Faribault county." Now as Latimer was instrumental in getting Dunn the place of chief clerk, at a time when, according to the Union, "every one knew he was a rabid secessionist," and as the Union says his services have been very acceptable in all thing save boundary line, we fail, up this way. to see just where the consistency of our 'Union' friend is, in abusing Governor Miller for doing just what it heartily endorses in Latimer,—Winnebago Whig

Yes; it's very likely that Mr. Latimer, a new man in the House, and from a District entitled to but one member, should be able to secure the Chief Clerkship for Mr. Dunn. You know better than that, friend Holley. We venture the assertion that Mr. Latimer had no more to do with his election than the editor of the Whig, except to vote for him after he was nominated in caucus.

Items from the Blue Earth Advocate.

The friends of Rev Mr. Clow at Blue Earth City gave a party for his benefit at Sheriff Robertsons the other evening. The affair was pleasant and agreeable, and a handsome sum of money was raised.

The Advocate informs its readers how to build a court house, and says, "teams going to Mankato could get the stones at Garden City, most of the balance could be sawed at the mill in this city." We were not aware that they had a mill at Blue Earth for sawing stone.

The citizens of Blue Earth have formed an association for the purpose of building a wind grist mill at that place. They meet to-morrow afternoon to elect officers and hear the report of the committee.

For the Union.

MR. EDITOR.—I noticed in your issue of the 25th inst., an article signed by "H." of Vernon, in which he seems puzzled to know how five added to thirty makes twenty-five, and feels, as he says, "considerably inclined to pitch into Garden City," for getting credited with volunteers who never belonged to them. And he reccommends for us a diploma for "tremendnous swearing. Now as I was employed by both towns, Garden City and Vernon, to draw their affidavits, allow me to state a few facts to set the matter right with the readers of your journal.

Upon the Adjutant General's certificate of credits to our town, I found two names, Charles Ward and Luther Bell; the former credited to our town and claimed by Vernon, the latter credited to Vernon and claimed by our town. Both of these men I knew of my own personal knowledge belonged to Vernon, and therefore took no testimony in their cases. These were the only men claimed by both towns. After our affidavits were all taken and sent away, I was applied to by the chairman of Vernon to draw affidavits for his town, and did so. I told him we had done nothing in the case of Ward and Bell, and that he could probably have them by putting in affidavits for them. I drew the affidavit and made oath in the case of Ward myself, thereby giving to Vernon, Ward who was already credited to Garden City. Thus you see we have no misnnderstanding with Vernon whatever, and no possible chance for any.

Now, Mr. Editor, this man H. whoever he may be, certainly deserves something for the effort he has made in thus bringing himself before the public. And if he will call at Garden City when he is down this way he shall be presented with a "big diploma," for his excessive ignorance, and the one he proposes for Garden City he can keep and give to that bob or nabob, in Mankato who wrote his insolent article for him.

S. C. CLARK.

Garden City, March, 27th 1864.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune says of the National Intelligencer book swindle, that, 'Messrs. Clark of New York and Windom of Minnesota, knocked it on the head in short notice.'

Mr. Windom put an extinguisher upon it by exposing an attempt of the lobby agents of the concern to push it through by offers of bribery.

A Change of Land Grant.

The Winnebago Whig has the following very excellent and timely remarks on the resolution introduced into Congress by Senator Wilkinson:

A resolution has been introduced in the U. S. States by Senator Wilkinson giving permission to the Winona and St. Peter Railroad company to locate their line wherever it may seem best for said company to do so, and releasing them from the obligation to build their road to certain towns whether it is feasible to do so or no. A strong opposition to this very sensible resolution has sprung up in the town of St. Peter, the people of which town seem to be afraid that if said resolution should pass Mankato will be selected by said company as the terminus of their road on the Minnesota river. We presume they are more jealous than wise in this idea, for if the town of St. Peter has any business to justify a Railroad company building a road there, such a road will be built there under the operation of this resolution, and the only benefit the passage of the resolution can be to the Railroad company is to permit them to build their road also to other towns the business of which it may be desirable for said company to secure. Remonstrances to the passage of such resolution having been sent to Congress from St. Peter, it is very proper and necessary that petitions for the passage of the same should he sent from localities interested in the Railroad being built to Mankato as well as St. Peter. As the people of Faribault and Martin counties are directly interested in the Railroad prospects of Mankato it being the market for their produce, we think every man in these two counties should sign a petition urging the passage by Congress of this resolution of Senator Wilkinsons. Such petitions should be circulated in every township in these two counties at once, and forwarded to our Representatives in Congress. This is no attempt to prevent other localities from having a Railroad but it is one to break up that dog in the manger programme which was inaugurated by those who secured the original Land Grant from Congress to build up at the expense of the United States, and the people of the State a few sickly town sites.

At a complimentary dinner given in Boston last Saturday to the Congressional Naval Committee, Hon. Edward Everett alluded ironically to the British taunt against the navy because it had not caught the Alabama. Napoleon Bonaparte sailed from Toulon with 400 ships of war and transports, yet Lord Nelson, with the fleet with which he gained the battle of the Nile, could not catch him, although he chased all round the Mediterranean. He didn't catch him the next year, although Napoleon stopped to take Malta and visit his relations. In 1815 Nelson didn't catch Napoleon as he sailed from Elba. The Mediterranean, compared with the Atlantic and Indian Seas, where the Alabama roams at large, is but a millpond.

On the 18th inst., the Senate debated the bill to promote enlistments of colored troops by freeing the wives and children of all enlisted soldiers. The second section provides for compensation, and Senator Wilkinson moved to strike it out, declaring that he did not want this Government to become the purchaser of slaves, and that we had already gone too far in acknowledging property in slaves. Upon which the N. Y. Tribune justly remarks:

Undoubtedly, and it is quite time begin to consider whether if any body is to have compensation, the slave should not have it a hundred times rather than the master. The master has had the lifelong unpaid toil of the slave. Why should he be paid for continuing to steal it?

Neal Dow reached Washington on Monday direct from Richmond. He appeared on the floor of the House during the afternoon in his Libby costume, consisting of a flannel shirt blue pants, and a single-breasted private soldier's coat, sadly torn and sewed up in the back by the General himself. He says that if we have any succes in this campaign, it must be the last one, that the rebels cannot hold out for another, All he saw there indicated exhaustion. The General complains that some of his old Maine law disciples in Richmond don't like to live up to his precepts since they became rebels. He expresses a desire to be in the field again as soon as possible.

Thirty-five federal soldiers recently escaped from the Columbus S. C. prison.

Idaho.

We dont like the idea of paying $10,000 and leading emigrants 800 miles out of the way, just to feed the poor saints in the northern portion of our State, but we suppose we shall have to "grin and bear it" because it will be the 'making' of the saintly 'pups' and because the people of Mankato and all along the Southern route haven't life and energy enough to take measuers to obtain the establishment of a road through the southern portion of our State to the mines of Idaho. The people of the southern part of our State have just as good a right to memorialize Congress first, for a wagon road, second, for a railroad, third for a telegraph line, as have the Saints and Indian traders of Northern Minnesota, but yet they dont do it. For an obscure plowjogger, we think we have done our part. Let the people of Mankato take the lead—they will be the most benefited—let the Merchants and Hotel Keepers from Mankato to La Crescent, along the whole line, take hold of the matter and there will be no trouble in making this the great thoroughfare from La Crosse to Idaho via WILTON, Mankato and the newly discovered coal fields on the Cottonwood. The principal property holders in this City on account of their superhuman efforts in behalf of every enterprise which will tend to enhance the growth of the place, will probably be awakened some fine morning, after a midnight rejoicing, by the shrill whistle of the Iron Horse as he passes through our town with lightning speed on his way to the gold clad regions of the West.—Wilton News.

SECESSION.—Gov. Vance, of North Carolina, thinks secession from the original Union a very good thing—but secession from the Confedracy he speaks of as follows;

'I can assure you, my fellow-citizens,' says he, 'that secession from the Confedracy will involve you in a new war, a bloodier conflict than you now deplore. 'But,' you may say, 'Mr. Davis and his Government, will not dare to make war on a seceding State; because the right of secession is recognized in the Confederacy.' So it is my friends; but you see by that time you have thrown off the Constitution, you have gotton from under its obligations and sworn you would have nothing to do with it. Do you expect the Confederacy to be bound by a document you refuse to recognize as affecting yourselves? So soon as you announce to the world you are a sovereign and independent nation, as a matter of cource the Confederacy has the right of declaring war against England, France, or Holland. This right is inherent in all sovereignties.'

On this theory, even admitting the general government to be waging war against the seceded States, we do not see that they have any right to complain.

D. Bruner in 1857, and lots numbers one (1), two (2), three (3), four (4), five (5), six (6), seven (7), eight (8), nine (9), and ten (10), in block number six (6) in said town of mankato as surveyed and platted by John T. A DISTURBANCE BETWEEN THE GERMANS AND IRISH.—Last Monday twenty-two mule teams came up from St. Paul after pork. The Irish teamsters were engaged nearly all day in loading the train, and just before dark, after having coralled their mules, started out to have a good time. Passing by Ulman's saloon, or near there, a dog belonging to some German ran out and barked at them. Some of the Irish started after it with their whips in hand The Germans of course ran to the rescue and thus the melee was commenced. Knives, axes, pitch-forks and cord wood sticks were used quite freely. One German, was knocked off his horse, and was set upon by four or five Irishmen, and terrible beaten. Mr. Ulman's daughter was knocked down by an Irishman. Six or seven of the Germans were severely bruised, and one, it was said, had been stabbed. Peter Mader, a german soldier belonging to Co. E. was struck on the forehead with a piece of round iron about two feet long, inflicting a frightful gash.

A messenger was dispatched to Capt. McKusick to send down a guard to quell the disturbance. Lieutenant Howard was at once informed who, within thirty minutes thereafter had a guard of forty men of Co. E on the ground.

By this time the fight was over, and the Irish had retired to their quarters. The guard quietly surrounded the building and Lient Howard with a squad of men passed up stairs where he found about twenty of them The sheriff came in soon after with a warrant and arrested seven. They were placed under guard over night and the next morning brought before justice Hoerr for trial. They were found guilty and fined as follows: Murphy, Fogerty and Dewan fifty dollars and costs; Jerry Dwyer James Lynch twenty-five dollars each and costs; John O'Harra fifteen dollars and costs, and two of them were discharged.

The Germans were very much excited during the trial, and had it not been for the guard would have given these "paceable citizens" a taste of hemp. And it would have been a blessing to the country if they had. They were regular Missouri wharf rats who would rather fight than eat.

INCIDENTS IN COURT.—Of all nations the Irish is the wittiest, as illustrated in the trial of the Irish mule drivers who were arrested Monday evening, for taking part in a riot. Our reporter took notes for a while, but says, divil a bit could he take 'em all because, and be jabers he had to laugh so much.

After they were brought into court, the justice asked them if they wished a jury trial, and one of them replied "an shure, an be jabers, it makes no differince at all."

The charge was then read, when the following conversation took place.

COURT.—"Michael Murphy, what plead you to these charges, guilty or not guilty?"

PRISONER.—"An' why showld I be pladin to that, whin yer honer, I was not there at all, at all, but was jest out fading the mules, an so I was?"

"Very well; now are you guilty or not guilty to these charges?"

"Plaze, yer honer, an how can I be guilty whin I was not inywhar?"

"Then you plead not guilty?"

"Yes, an' I bes."

"Jerry Dwyer, what say you; guilty or not guilty?"

Prisoner, very calmly, guilty."

"James Lynch, what say you guilty or not guilty?"

This pacable gentleman had evidently "been up" before, as he answered.

"Plaze, and does the man who made this complaint sware that I was there, and that I sthruck him wid a cord wood sthick, whin I can prove by young Frenchman—

"You will please plead guilty or not guilty to the charge, and bring up your testimony at the proper time sir," said the Court.

"Is it the man ye tuk me in to see? Shure an' he said I was not the man, at all."

"You can plead guilty or not guilty."

"Shure, an' I'm innocent of that crime; an' if there be ony mon in this city kin say I had ony hand in the thing—

"You plead not guilty, then?"

"Does that mon say that I sthruck him?"

You will please plead guilty or not guilty.

[Scratching his head] "Not guilty yer honer."

"John O. Harra, are you guilty or not guilty?"

"Not guilty."

"Louis Leclaire, are you guilty or not guilty?"

"Not Guilty."

"Andrew Johnson?"

"Not guilty."

"Jerry Dewan?"

"May I spake, plaze yer honer? Dose the man swear that I was there and knocked him off his horse wid a sthick?"

"You hear the charges, now are you guilty or not guilty?"

"Not guilty." [turning to the others] "Divil a sthick did I have. Did I?"

After the trial had commenced, and Martin Magen was giving in his testimony, he was interrupted by Jerry Dewan, as follows;

"Do you say mon, that I was the first man to sthrike? Now if ye's will swear to that ye'll go to Hell sthraight."

Elizabeth Ulman was interrupted while giving testimony, and the colloquy that took place produced roars of laughter.

Questions by Pat. "Did ye's see me wid a sthick of cord wood?"

"You had a stick mit te rest."

"An' what kind of a sthick did I have now?"

"You hat a stick apout so long." (measuring on her arm.)

Now, are ye's shure I knocked the mon down? Can ye's sware to it?"

"Yes I saw you, sir."

"An' ye's is right enough."

Questions by one of the prisoners.

"Now plaze mam, did ye's see me strike that man?"

"I did."

"An' can ye's swear to it?"

"Yes."

"Well, didn't the mon sthrike me fust, now? Didn't ye's see him do it?"

"No."

"Be jabers, mum, an' there's jist where he missed it.'

Questions by another prisoner.

"Well now marm, did ye's see me sthrike?"

"I did."

"Did ye's see this man there? laying his hand on one of the others.

"Yes.'

"Did ye's see us wid cord wood sticks now?"

"You had sticks."

"An' do ye's know that?"

"I saw you.'

"Well I want yes to swear to it.' Laughing in the room.

"Now, marm, if yes see me there, and see that man there, what kind of clothes did we wear? Now swear to that."

Witness replied that they had changed their clothing since, and she could not tell.

TOWN ELECTIONS.—Next Tuesday the annual town election in this county and throughout the State will take place. The question that most interests our citizens is that of building bridges. We trust all will look at this matter correctly, and vote for the best interests of the county. We stand greatly in need of bridges. Our facilities for travel, the wealth, business, and prosperity of the county would be double in five years time if the bridges are built, and the increased value of taxable property will be so great that we will hardly feel the tax to pay these bridge bonds. We urge upon our friends throughout the county to vote for building these bridges. It will prove a mutual benefit to all.

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.—At their caucus yesterday the Democrats nominated the following persons for the several town offices. The election will come off next Tuesday.

Supervisors—George Maxfield, Chairman, Peter Frenzel and John Brules.

Town Clerk—John J. Porter, Jr.

Treasurer—Isaac Marks.

Assessor—S. M. Walker.

Justices Peace—B. Moreland and John W. Hoerr.

Constables—A. M. Collins and J. P. Sanger.

GODEY for April is on our table. Its reading matter is interesting and varied. The Lady's Book has a large list of subscribers at this place, and yet the number ought to be double.

THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY SANITARY FAIR.—We have received from the managers of this Fair a circular informing us that there will be held in St. Louis on the 17th of May next a fair to continue two or more weeks. Its object is to raise a sufficient fund for the use of the armies in the Mississippi Valley, and for the relief of their sick and wounded. For a years supply it is estimated that at least five hundred thousand dollars should be provided. Here is an excellent opportunity for our citizens to do something for the western Soldiers. Capt McKusick will receive and forward all contributions of money and stores. We understand that a meeting will be held at City Hall on Monday evening next to take this matter in to consideration.

A NEW PAPER.—The Blue Earth City Advocate is the title of a paper just started at the County seat of Faribault county, by Carr Huntington, recently of Winnebago. We have examined its columns very closely to ascertain whose progeny it was, and finally discovered the publisher's name in an advertisement in one corner, looking as though he were ashamed to have his readers see it. We wish the paper all merited success.

AT HOME AGAIN.—R. Goodyear esq., returned from Mount Carmel, in the land of "wooden nutmegs" last Monday, where he has been visiting his friends. He reports good sleighing at Erie Pa., as he passed through that place. We are under obligations to him for a batch of Eastern papers.

SHIPMENT OF PORK.—Capt. McKusick received orders a few days ago to ship one hundred and fifty barrels of pork to St. Paul, and on Monday last a train of twenty-two mule teams came up after it. As the Press is big on figures will its porcine editor inform us what has become of the large amount of pork packed there during last winter?

A DESERTER CAUGHT.—A soldier named Hussey, belonging to Co. E 2nd Cavalry, was arrested at Mapleton by a guard sent up by Lient Howard on Wednesday last. His leave of absence expired nearly two weeks ago, and failing to report, the Lient sent for him. He is an old offender, and will be sent to Fort Snelling.

REMOVED.—John Frischolz has removed his saloon from his old stand, to good rooms in Bergholtz block, Although we are no lover of that delicious beverage, there are many of our readers that are, and for their benefit and information we tell them that Frischolz sells two glasses of Lager beer for five cents. Two "smiles" for five cents! That's cheap enough.

THE April number of the Atlantic is received, and maintains its character for sound literature. All who wish to get a good magazine should subscribe at once for the Atlantic.

ABSENT-MINDEDNESS.—A lady at the hotel putting pepper in her tea instead of sugar. We have heard ladies pepper their husbands when they were not absent-minded.

THE river has been rising for a few days past, and there is probably dew enough for boats to run. At least there is enough due.

ARRIVAL OF CAVALRY HORSES.—Capt Slaughter returned Wednesday evening from Fort Ridgely, bringing with him twenty-five horses for his company.

Some advertisements are unavoidably crowded out.

It is especially adapted to those who are afflicted with the Fever and Ague, or any other disease arising from a disordered condition of the digestive organs. For the Fever and Ague there is perhaps no medicine in the world equal to it, as it enters, purifies and replenishes the blood, which is so important to bring about a healthy action in diseases of this nature. The Bitters are now among the most popular, and at the same time, valuable specifics in the medical world. In recommending it to the public. we are fully conscious of doing them a great service, knowing, as we do, their many excellent qualities, and sure and speedy action in all cases where the disease is caused by irregularity of the digestive organs A trial will suffice for the most skeptical. ☞ See advertisement.

Six Weeks in the Sioux Teepees.

BY MRS. SARAH F. WAKEFIELD.

This is not a history of the Indian War, but a narrative of Mrs. Wakefield's sufferings while she was a captive in Little Crow's camp. She was on her way to Fort Ridgely, accompanied by Geo. H. Gleason, when they were met by the Indians. They shot him and dragged her and her two children into captivity.

This is the only narrative that has been published by any of the captives It is for sale by Lewis & Frisbie at the low price of 25 cents.

The Folding Case of the Family Machine is a piece of cunning workmanship of the most useful kind. It protects the machine when not in use, and when about to be operated may be opened as a spacious and substantial table to sustain the work.—While some of the Cases, made out of the choicest woods, are finished in the simplest and chastest manner possible, others are adorned and embellished in the most costly and superb manner.

It is absolutely necessary to see the Family Machine in operation, so as to judge of its great capacity and beauty.

It is fast becoming as popular for family sewing as our Manufacturing machines are for manufacturing purposes.

The Branch Offices are well supplied with silk, twist, thread, needles, oil, &c., of the very best quality.

All who may be visiting Mankato, either for business or pleasure, especially those from the surrounding counties are invited to call and satisfy themselves. Attached to the premises are stables not excelled in the State either for capacity or convenience. SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do: will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood; and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Boodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparations contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of Indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs. Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of bilious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and reestablish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

Who can say that they are not frequently followed by those "Direful Diseases?" "Insanity and consumption." Many are aware of the cause of their suffering, but none will confess the records of the insane asylums. And melancholly deaths by Consumption bear ample witness to the truth of the assertion. The Constitution once affected with organic weakness, requires the aid of Medicine to Strengthen and Invigorate the system.

Which Helmbold's Extract Buchu invariably does.

A trial will convince the most skeptical.

THE RIVER.—Steamboat arrivals from below are as yet limited to one per day. The Frank Steele is making daily trips between this place and La Crosse, arriving at from 3 to 5 o'clock in the afternoon and departing in time to connect with the morning train on the La Crosse railroad. The Cutter runs above to the foot of the Lake. The Golden Star, Hudson and Union make occasional trips up and down. From the head of the Lake to St. Paul, a small boat the H. S. Allen is now running. The passenger business on the rives are brisk, and freights also are beginning to come on in considerable quantities.

The rains have produced a slight raise in the river above. The water at St. Paul is four feet above the low water mark of last season.

A dispatch from Prasie du Chine annaunces that the steamer Itasca will leave thrt place for a trip up the river to-morrow.—Winona Republican.

The Minnesota Railroad Grant.

The question of a land grant to the Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroad Co. is now before Congess. The grant is to aid in the construction of said road from St. Paul to Lake Superior. The bill, as amended, proposes to extend from Sioux City, the point where the Northern branch of the Pacific Railroad begins the route through Northern Iowa, through Minnesota by Mankato, which is at the big bend of the river Minnesota, and by St. Paul, and through Wisconsin by Hudson to Lake Superior, making a distance of about one hundred miles in the State of Iowa, about two hundred or two hundred and fifty in the State of Wisconsin. The amendment, which strikes out all after the enacting clause of the original bill, provides that lands which have been granted already on this route either to the State of Wisconsin or Minnesota or Iowa, are to be deducted from the land granted under the terms of this amendment. It is thought that the amendment will reconcile the interests of all the States Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa, and at the same time extend to them the privilege of reaching the Northern branch of the Pacific railroad for the benefit of all those States and the entire Northwest.—Tribune Cor.

CRIME IN NEW YORK CITY.—Some curious statements of the present state of crime in its general results in the city of New York are mentioned—perhaps most interesting as illustrating the effects of the derangement of all usual ways of action in the war. There is less burglary; more forgery, as in many official papers connected with recruiting and payment there is more inducement and greater hope for forgery; more hasty and reckless personal violence; and a very large increase of petit larceny, especially in the way of picking pockets, in which department the adroitness of native adepts has gone far ahead of the foreigners, who once had all the mastery, so that it is said the Yorker can pick the pocket of an English pickpocket—which probably is a synonym for the last degree of ability. The cheief operators are, of course, young men.

The French consul did not appear in conjunction with the consuls from other countries in the procession at the inauguration of Hahn. This looks suspicious. Is France about to recognize?

A Detroit cavalry Captain was astounded a few days since, when one of his new recruits walked up to him and declared that soldiering was rather disagreeable, and said recruit, being a female, would quit the business.

Gen. Grant spent a day at the Continental Hotel in Philadelphia last week During the entire morning there was a continuous stream of visitors to the General. Once he made his appearance upon Chestnut street, was recognized and the loud cheers that were uttered soon drew together quite a crowd. The hero was so pressed upon, that it became necessary for the police to force a passage for him.

Poetry.

For the Union

Minnesota Cavalry Song.

BY DELLY ATHERTON.

Away to the battle field! Away!
Yet not as cowards go,
With curses deep, which they muttering speak,
And heavy steps and slow.

Away at our country's call! Away!
With pulses wandering high:
Oh, the young blood leaps to warm our cheeks
As our good steeds onward fly!

Away in Freedom's name! Away!
To battle for the right!
With our sabers bare her foes we dare
And enter the perilous fight.

Away, with a murmured prayer! Away!
And a thought of those who are dear:
Tho' we may fall, with glory our pall
We'll rest on a soldier's bier!

Mankato, March 30th.

Select Miscellany.

The Lost Ship.

BY THERON B. APPELL.

Stanley Thornton, the hero of our tale, was a young merchant in a New England village. By diligent attention to his business, he had amassed some ten thousand dollars, and began to be regarded as a very nice young man a pink of propriety, by all ambitious damsels and maneuvering mothers. But he soon fell into dis-repute in the matrimonial market for he became smitten by the handsome feature and elegant form of Adeline Stanton.

Adeline was the only daughter of Mrs. Stanton the widow of a well to do farmer, who had been dead some years. Her husband left another daughter, Maria, some two years older than Adeline, the child of his first wife.

When her husband died Mrs. Stanton sold the farm, which with the usual sharpness of stepmothers, she had secured to her possession, to rear her Adeline as a lady—a process that did not sadly diminish the proceeds of the farm. Adeline had grown haughty, capricious, handsome and a would-be-belle She practiced music, painted sickly-looking flowers, made morning calls, &c, while Maria neglected and frowned upon, performed the house drudgery. Marla was fair gentle and quiet, quite intelligent and a good singer, but never allowed to sing in company with Adeline

Stanley Thornton was charmed by the beauty and smiles of Adeline; he professed his love, and she nothing loth to wed with a nice young merchant returned his love, and it was soon whispered at sewing societies and tea table gossip that they were engaged. Stanley soon had food for reflection; his lady love was haughty and capricious—she was sure of her lover and began to flirt with others. Stanley became better acquainted with the gentle Maria and a vague idea that he had made a mistake in his choice, haunted his brains, but he endeavoured to banish it as treason to the love he had pledged.

Meanwhile in the course of his business he had freighted a vessel to the West Indies, placing all he was worth and more in the venture. The vessel had been gone many weeks, and it was time for her return, when one morning the following paragraph met the eyes of all readers of the village paper:

'We regret to record the loss, by fire of the Barque Albion, freighted by our enterprising young townsman Stanley Thornton. She was richly laden, and her loss will be a severe blow. It is to be hoped that his creditors will not press him, but to allow him to proceed with his business.'

When Adeline read this did she weep over the loss of her lover—did she hasten to console him with her smiles and her love in the hour of his adversity? By no means. A blank expression came over her beautiful face, then a frowning wrinkled brow, and she hastened to give her mother the intelligence and hold a consultation on the position of affairs which council of war or rather of love, resulted as follows:—the next day Stanley called—Adeline received him coldly.

'I suppose you have heard of my misfortune Adeline?'

'Yes.'

'It has stripped me of the labors of years. I have nothing left me now but your love.—But cheered by that, I will commence the world again.'

'I am very sorry Mr. Thornton. I shall ever regard you with kindness, but your altered circumstances will make it unwise for us to marry.'

The features of Stanley remained calm unmoveable.

'You mean that you wish to be released from our engagement?'

'If you are willing I desire to be released. I am unfit to aid you in the struggles of supporting a family.'

'So be it then if it pleases you.' He arose and departed.

'The dollar is almighty,' muttered he as he strode along; 'here is one who caressed me and professed to love me, when I represented ten thousand, and now turns me off coldly without a sigh when she thinks me penniless. Talk about heathen idols and the Juggernaut—the worship of the dollar sunders the tenderest ties. Man, if ever so noble and talented, is not regarded with a glance if he has not the magic dollar, while the veriest doll is petted and carressed, if he happens to inherit a fortune. Vice and drunkenness is winked at, if clothed in silk and broadcloth; but woe be the poor man if he errs; if he steals five dollars away with him to jail; but let some rich man embezzle another hundred thousand, and he will be sent to Congress—sure.'

Stanley was so lost in these reflections that he nearly ran against the approaching lady—it was Maria Stanton.

'Good evening Mr. Thornton; I am so sorry for y u.

'Maria do you regret my loss of fortune? If I had been your lover would you have discarded me?'

'What mean you! Surely Adeline has not——.'

'Aye, Adeline has dismissed me—but you did not answer me—would you have done the same by a lover?'

'No, no! But you have no right to ask my thoughts.'

'Then give me the right Maria—be my love my helpmate in building up my fortune. I am poor and I love you!'

Joy thrilled through Maria's heart, at his earnest words; she whispered a gentle loving reply as he drew her to his bosom, and turning escorted her home, requesting her to keep their engagement a secret for the present.

A week after, another paragraph ead as follows in the village paper:

'We are happy to state that the loss of the barque Albion was a mistake. She arrived in port yesterday. It was another vessel, the Albert, that was burned, and mistaken for her.'

'Oh, how did that horrid statement get into the papers!' exclaimed the heartless Adeline, when she learned the truth. Shrewd people suspected that Stanley Thornton caused it to be inserted—but that we can leave the readers to guess.

Adeline received another shock one fine morning by learning that her sister was married to Stanley Thornton on the evening previous. In vain were her regrets, or the rage of her mother. She is still looking for engagement number two.

Flowers and Children.

Flowers and children are of near kin and too much of forcing too much of display ruins their chiefest charms I love to associate them together, and to win them to the love of flowers some day they tell me that a violet or a tuft of lillies is dead; but on a spring morning they come, radient with the story that the very same violet is blooming sweeter than ever upon some far away cleft in the hill side. So you my child if the Great Master lifts you from us, shall bloom—as God is good on some richer, or some sunnier ground.

We talk thus; but if the change really come, it is more grievous than the blight of a thousand flowers. She who loved their search among the thickets, will never search them. She whose glad eyes would have opened in pleasent bewilderment upon some change of shrubbery or of paths, will never open them again. She whose feet would have danced along the new wood-path carrying joy and merriment into its shady paths, will never set foot upon these walks again!

What matters how the brambles grow? her dress will not be torn; what matter the broken railing by the water?—she will never topple over from the bank. The hatchet may be hung from a lower nail now—the little hand that might have stolen posession is stiff and fast! God has it.

And when spring wakens all it echoes; of the wrens song of the blue bird warble, of the plaintive cry of mistress cuckoo [she daintily called her mistress cuckoo'] from the edge of the wood—what eager earnest, delighted listners have we been lifting the blue eyes, shaking back the curls dancing to the melody! And when the violets, repeat the sweet lesson they learned last year of the sun and of the warmth, and bring their fragrance on the air again, the blithe little spirit that welcomed them is stilled forever in the silence of the grave.

It is said to be satisfactorily demonstrated that every time a wife scolds her husband, she adds a wrinkle to her face! It is thought the announcement of this fact will have a salutary effect, especially as it is understood that every time a wife smiles on her husband it will remove one of the old wrinkles! Wonder how it is with the lords of creation, when they scold their wives! Is 'sauce for the goose sauce for the gander' in this case?

General Washington's Last vote.

Every incident in the life of Washington is full of interest. That plain, heroic, magnitude of mind which distinguishes him above all other men was evident in all his actions. Patriotism, chastened by sound judgement and careful thought, prompted all his public acts, and made them examples for the study and guidance of mankind. It has been said that no one can have the shortest interview with a truly great man without being made sensible of his superiority. Of too many who have in some way earned the title of great, this is by no means true. Its applicability to the character of Washington is verified in the following interesting circumstance:

"I was present when General Washington gave his last vote. It was in the spring of 1799, in the town of Alexandria. He died the 11th of December following. The court-house of Fairfax county was then over the market-house, and immediately fronting Gadsby's tavern. The entrance into it was by a slight flight of crazy steps on the outside. The election was progressing—several thousand of persons in the court-house yard and immediate neighboring streets and I was standing on Gadsby's steps when the Father of his Country drove up, and immediately approached the court-house steps; and when within a yard or two of them I saw eight or ten good looking men, from differen directions, certainly without the least concert, spring simultaneously, and place themselves in position to uphold and support the steps, should they fall in the Generals ascent of them. I was immediately at his back, and in that position entered the court-room—followed in his wake through a dense crowd to the polls; heard him vote; returned with him to the outward crowd; heard him cheered by more than two thousand persons as he entered his carriage, and saw his departure. There were five or six candidates sitting on the bench; as the General approached them, they arose in a body and bowed smilingly; and the salutation having been returned very gracefully, the General immediately cast his eye towards the registry of the polls, When Colonel Deneale (I think it was) said; 'Well, General, how do you vote?' The General looked at the candidates and said; 'Gentleman, I vote for measures, not for men;' and, turning to the recording-table, audibly pronouncing his vote; saw it entered, made a graceful bow, and retired.

Yankeeism on the field.

The Portland Transcript has the following, which, whether exactly true or not, is a good Yankee story:

At the battle of the Rappahannock Station, after the 5th Main has gained possession of the works in their front and were busy taking a whole brigade of Johnys to the rear, Col. Edwards, who was one of the first to reach the rifle-pits took a few men from company G. and pressed on in quest of more prisoners, supposing some might be trying to get away in the darkness of the night. Following the line of fortifications down toward the river, he saw before him a long line of troops in the rifle-pits. Finding he was in a tight place, he determined to put on a bold face.

'Where is the officer in command of these troops?' demanded the gallant Colonel.

'Here,' answered the Colonel who was commanding the Rebel brigade, 'and who are you sir?'

"My name is Colonel Edwards, of the 5th Maine, and I demand you to surrender your company.'

'I will confer with my officers first,' replied the rebel officer.

'Not a moment will I allow, sir,' said Colonel Edwards. 'Don't you see my columns advancing? (pointing to a large body of men, marching over the hill, but who were the rebel prisoners being marched to the rear.) Your forces on the right have all been captured and your retreat is cut off,' and as the rebel commander hesitated he continued, 'Forward! 5th Maine and 21st New York!'

'I surrender, sir,' said the rebel commander, quickly. 'Will you allow me the courtesy of retaining a sword that has never been dishonored?

'Yes sir,' replied Colonel E. 'but I will take the swords of those officers,' pointing to the Colonels by his side.

They were handed to him.

'Now order your men to lay down their arms, and pass to the rear with this guard.'

They obeyed, and a whole brigade of Louisianians, the famous 5th and 6th Tigers, being among them, permitted themselves to be disarmed, and marched to the rear as prisoners of war by Colonel Edwards, and less than a dozen men of his regiment.

A STRONG-MINDED FEMALE.—Mrs. Catherine Long is evidently a woman of this class, as circumstances will show. Some few weeks ago during a period of conjugal disturbance, she shot her husband, James, and turned him out of doors, refusing even to allow him to take his clothes, since which time she has 'run' the grocery establishment they formerly jointly kept, on her own account. A day or so ago the man obtained a writ of replevin for the articles, and accompanied Constables Hough and Flemming to his former residence on Illinois street. But despite the dignity of the 'guardians of the law,' Mrs. Long refused them all admittance and on their entering by force, charged them all, yesterday, before Esquire Cuthbertson, with riot. Unfortunately, and doubtless to the great surprise of the plaintiff, the case was dismissed.—Chicago Tribune.

Railroad Meeting.

A meeting of the citizens of this Village was held on Friday evening last for the purpose o providing, by action for the circulation of petition asking for the passage of a resolution introduced, some time since into the Senate of the United States by Senator Wilkinson, to so amend the 'Land grant act of the Winona and St. Peter Railroad, that it may be optional with the railroad company to build the road via St. Peter or Mankato as it shall think most proper.

The meeting was called to order by electing Col. J. C. Ide Chairman. D L. Whipple was chosen Secretary. Mr. Pitcher of Mankato, by request of the Chairman, addressed the meeting upon the importance of the united and immediate action. His remarks were very appropriate and well received; after which committee consisting of G. W. Watkins, E. A. Smith, and John C. Hunter, were elected to obtain means and employ men to circulate the petitions through the county. The Secretary was chosen a committee of one to notify Messrs. Watkins Smith and Hunter of their appointment, and urge upon them the necessity of prompt and immediate action. A liberal contribution was then made by those present to forward the enterprise. We hope the committee will acquit themselves nobly in their undertaking.

The meeting was not as numerously attended as it should have been; but considering the circumstances, our citizens done, perhaps, all that could have been expected.

And while we are thinking of this matter we may as well say a few words to our people, in regard to what we think about the matter. Our railroad system was inaugurated, engineered and carried through by a few wireworking, townsite speculating politicians. Contrary to what should have been done, the acts, granting lands for the construction of railroads, compelled the companies to build the road by way of certain intermediate points, without any particular regard to the feasibility of the route, or the wants of the people. We understand that the managers of the Transit road have become convinced (of what every one acquainted with the county already knew) that the route from Rochester via. Wilton and Mankato is much more feasible, than the one via. St. Peter. Yet as soon as Senator Wilkinson introduced the resolution for the purpose of changing the act so as to leave such locality to stand upon its own merits—so as to allow the Railroad company to go by way of St. Peter or Mankato—as soon as opportunity is given for a fair and honorable competition between localities—as soon as there was no partiality to be shown; just so soon, all the saintly hounds of the saintly would-be cities from Saint Anthony via. St. Cloud and St Paul even up to the stubborn St. Peter, send forth a dismal howl against the enormity of the crime of allowing anybody except the saints and the few who do their dirty work, to even enter into that Railroad Heaven, which should have been prepared for all the sons and daughters of Minnesota. Now it needs no argument to convince any reasonable man that there is nothing unfair in Senator Wilkinsons proposition. If as is contended by the saints of St. Peter, the route via. St. Peter is the best why squirm? Why call Senator Wilkinson hard names? Why not let your neighbor, Mankato to have a little hope? According to your statement it will never end in ruption.

The plain, simple, unvarnished state of things is this: The Rail road company have become satisfied that it is much cheaper to build the road from Rochester to Mankato, than to St. Peter. All that the friends of the Mankato route ask, is that the company may have the privilege of building the road to whichever point they may think proper. Is there any thing wrong in this? Do the righteous Saints object to a fair competition; do they fear the result.

The people of this village should take more interest in this matter than they have heretofore. We ought to come together and form some sort of a society, (the poor class, such as mechanics, printers, lawyers, day laborers &c., who are not able to own a great deal of property, and who are somewhat dependent upon the outside world for support—we mean) for the purpose of opening a correspondence, and forming a more intimate acquaintance with the friends of this route east and west, and for the purpose of getting up a more united and timely action upon any matter which will be of interest to this village. In this way, no doubt, much assistance might be obtained from some of our non-resident proprietors.

We do not expect that Wilton will ever become as large as the City of New York or Chicago but we can see no good reason why it may not be as good an inland point as there is in Soutnern Minnesota. It takes men and money and children to make a town such as it should be. We want something besides a profitless, lounging, whiskey drinking, card playing aristocracy—not that we have any such at present—to take up the vacant lots of our village, build stores, mills, workshops and do the many other things which go to make up a village of thriving, industrious, happy people. By a united effort we can accomplish much; by individual effort little can be done. Wilton is surrounded by as good an agricultural district as there is in the world; our farmers are intelligent sober; the material for a good industrious sized town has been bountifully provided by nature; the means of future railroad communication—and not far in the future either—are within our reach; and all that is needed is a united, energetic, perserving, industrious effort on our part to bring about the most desirable attainments.—Wilton News.

The News.

Our information in regard to the situation in East Tennessee is not very authentic, but such as it is we give. Longstreet was, at our latest dates at Bull's Gap, about fifty-eight miles east of this place. We incline to believe this is so, for we have all along insisted that he would not leave until forced to do so. We still believe that. On Tuesday a regiment or part of a regiment, of rebel cavalry was in Sevier County, and on the same day a squad of rebels was on Little river in Blunt County This does not look like Longstreet was making a hasty retreat out of East Tennessee. One thing we think may be regarded as certain that is he has not left the State yet. Vaughn's force were at Moorsburg a few days ago. That point is opposite Bull's Gap, or Rogersville Junction, but north of the Holsten. If we are correct in our information Longstreet occupies a strong natural line of defense, stretching across the country from Moorsburg to the mouth of Chucky river, or Warrensburg on that river. Where our forces are, or what they are doing, it is not proper to say, but it is enough to say that General Schofield is at his post of duty, and is active and watchful.—Brownlow's Knoxville Whig.

A NEW GAS.—A late Washington dispatch says: 'Some interest has been excited here by reports showing the illumination of acytlene, a new gas. This is manufactured by decoxodizing steam by zinc, forming an oxide of that metal, while the nascent hydrogen produced combines with carbon, producing at least fifty per cent. more gas than is produced by the common method, and without any additional expenses. Tests with Bunson's photometer have proved that this new gas possesses a power of illumination four times greater than the Manhattan Company's gas, which it exceeds in durability twenty eight per cent.'

ORDERED IN TENNESSEE.—In noticing the general calm that reigns in military circles at this time, the Nashville Union of the 10th remarks: 'In Tennessee, scarcely a guerrilla band has been heard of for weeks; and certainly order in Gen. Rousseau's district is as perfect as in any of the loyal States. The General's executive ability is of the finest order, as is evinced by the manner in which he has brought order out of chaos, since his first installment as commander here. His liberal policy will contribute wonderfully to a restoration of the State of Tennessee to the Union.'

'Ah! Jemmy,' said a sympathizing friend to a man who was just too late for the train 'you did not run fast enough.'

'Oh yes I did,' said Jemmy, 'I ran fast enough but I did not start soon enough.

A man seeing an oyster vender pass by called out.

'Give me a pound of oysters.

'We sell oysters by measure and not by weight, was the oystermans reply.

'Very well,' said the man, 'then I'll take a yard of them'

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1864,
ABRAHAM LINCOLN

The Idaho Meeting.

In another column will be found a full report of the proceedings of this meeting. The project is of the greatest importance to our people, and we are glad to see them manifest so much interest in it. As has been said it is not a local measure, but one in which the whole of Southern Minnesota, has great interests at stake.

At this late hour of writing, we have not time to write a lengthy article and give this matter the attention it deserves, but shall take occasion in our next issue to do so. In the meantime we urge our exchanges between here and La Crosse to take hold of the subject and give us their co-operation. The importance of establishing this emigrant route will at once be seen by them, and we have no doubt we shall receive their united efforts.

The News.

From the seat of war there is but little news. General Grant is busily engaged in organizing and concentrating his forces and it is not known when he will be ready for action.

The elections, as far as heard from have resulted in favor of Union candidates. St. Louis elects a radical Mayor by over 2,000 majority. In Cincinnati, Lancaster and Dayton, Ohio, there are Union majorities. The Democrats carried Columbus In Leavenworth Kansas there was much rioting and the 'copperhead' candidates were elected. Princeton, N. J.,has gone Union. In Connecticut Buchingham, the Republican candidate is elected by about 5,000 majority. Last year his majority over all was 1,601.

The bill to take from the President the power to summarily dismiss any officer without trial, has been reported against by Judge Holt and the Senate Military Commitee.

Forrest is reported at Jackson, Tennessee, preparing to move South, with Grierson after him.

General Grant, while at Fortress Monroe, settled with Judge Ould the preliminaries to an exchange of prisoners. The rebels were willing to treat with him.

"Political Persecution."

Under the above heading, the Record of last week has a characteristic article in which it makes several charges against certain federal officials in connection with the administration of the United States Revenue Law. As the editor has in his columns, frequently stigmatized these laws as "infernal," it is not to be expected that he will place any fair construction upon their administration.

In respect to the case in point, Mr. Kramer has, we learn, been complained of for some time past by different persons residing in his vicinity, until it became necessary for the Collector to take some notice of the matter ; (and from the number of alleged sales, we should judge that Danville abounded in rattlesnakes, that is, if all the liquor sold was to cure rattlesnake bites.)

We understand it is to be the duty of the Collector, when complaint is made to him of persons who have repeatedly violated the Revenue law, to lodge his complaint with the United States Attorney at St, Paul. The Collector has nothing to do in regard to what particular Commissioner before whom offenders are brought for trial, as his special instructions from the Department state that the names of the delinquents and of the witnesses are to be transmitted by him to the United States Attorney. There his duty ends. The Attorney as a matter of course, has the papers made returnable before the commissioner where he resides.

It appears that Mr. Kramer has repeatedly violated the law, as the names of twelve witnesses were transmitted with the complaint to the Attorney. We don't think he has any just ground of complaint. He knew the law, and knew too, that he was violating it.. His duty, as a good citizen was to have made application for a license.

But there is another matter in regard to this 'influential and respectable citizen" of which we have a word to say. After Mr. Kramer was arrested, some of his townsmen complained that he was equally guilty as regarded his town, County and State taxes, and that he had sixteen horses, and paid but a very small tax. Our curiosity was excited, and on searching, we ascertained that he paid a personal tax on $163, and that all five of the Kramers paid in the aggregate, a tax on a valuation of $255.

This does not look as if his "controlling influence" was of the right sort. Does he "unintentionally transgress the law?" To afford "aid and comfort to the enemy" by striking at every measure vital to the success of the nation, is conceded to be the intention of all who are either secretly or openly opposing the government. We place Mr. Kramer and those who advocate his interests in this class.

We believe the Collector has and will lodge complaint against any party where he has proof that the law is being violated, without regard to their political status. We have been told that the first prosecution in this Division was against a Republican; and again, that within a few days one of the most prominent Republicans in the District has been complained of.

The Record will please name the parties whom the Collector dare not prosecute. We do not believe he can name a single one; at any rate, we are authorized to say that if there are any such known to him who are violating the law, and against whom he does not wish to make a public charge, that the Collector will be thankful for private information. We are anxious to see whether the Collector of this District "dare prosecute" a friend as well as a foe, and we shall therefore expect the Record to name the transgressors in his columns, or else furnish the information in a more private manner.

Special School Meeting.

A School Meeting was held at City Hall, last Saturday, the second of April, in pursuance of legal notice given by the District Trustees of School District No 1, notice of which was published in our issue of March 25th. The hour of meeting having arrived, the hall was crowded with citizens in whose hands lay the educational interests of our town.

Judge Finch was chosen Moderator, and E. D. B. Porter, Clerk.

By request, A. D. Seward, District Clerk, read the call, and the Secretary commenced reading the act of the Legislature, when a doubt was raised about the legality of choosing a clerk protem, while the District Clerk was present.

Mr Barney read from the School law the Section which gives the voters power to choose a Clerk protem in the absence of the District Clerk, when Mr. Porter vacated the Clerk's desk and A. D. Seward assumed it.

The Special act of the Legislature was then read.

Mr. James Shoemaker, then arose to address the meeting, and by a splendid coup de grace gained the floor. After some appropriate remarks he offered the following resolution.

Resolved. That the Trustees of School District number one, in Blue Earth County, Minnesota, be instructed to issue bonds of said district to the amount of two thousand dollars for the purpose of building a school house in said District under the provisions of the special act of February 29th, 1864, on that subject.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

On motion of James Shoemaker it was

Resolved, That the interest on the said bonds shall be eight per cent per annum.

J. A. Willard offered the following resolution which was adopted unanimously.

Resolved, That the said bonds be made payable as follows, to wit: Three hundred dollars in four years, five hundred dollars in five years, seven hundred dollars in six years, one thousand dollars in seven years, two thousand dollars in eight years, two thousand three hundred dollars in nine years, and three thousand two hundred dollars in ten years.

J. A. Willard moved that it is the opinion of this meeting that the trustees ought not to sell the bonds at less than par.

After some discussion an amendment was offered to strike out par and insert ninety cents.

The discussion was continued for some time, and finally a motion by E P. Freeman to indefinitely postpone the whole subject, was carried.

On motion, the meeting then adjourned.

The following is the School law passed by the Legislature:

An act to authorize School District number one, and sixteen in the County of Blue Earth, School district number four, in Wabasha County, and School district number one in Nicollet County to issue bonds.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota:

Sec. 1. That School district number one, in the County of Blue Earth be and the same is hereby authorized to issue bonds of said district to an amount not exceeding ten thousand dollars, for the purpose of raising money to build a School House in said district, and that School district number one in Nicollet County is hereby authorized to issue bonds in like manner to an amount not exceeding six thousand dollars for the purpose of raising money to pay any indebtedness of said District already incurred in building a School House and for the purpose of raising money to build a School House in said district or for either or both of said purposes, and that School district number four in Wabasha County be and the same is hereby authorized to issue bonds in like manner to an amount not exceeding four thousand dollars for the purpose of raising money to pay the indebtedness of such district incurred by the erection of a School House and to complete the same, such bonds in each district to be denomination School district Bonds.

Sec. 2. Said bonds shall be of any denomination not less than one hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, shall be made payable to bearer and signed by the Trustees of the respective districts and by them acknowledged before the Clerk of the District Court of their respective Counties with his certificate of acknowledgement and official seal attached thereto and shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding eight per cent per annum, payable annually and shall be made payable at any time not less than three nor more than ten years after date thereof.

Sec. 3. The amount of bonds to be issued, the rate of interest they shall bear, and the time when payable subject to the provisions of this act shall be fixed and determined by a vote of the legal voters of said School districts at a meeting or meetings to be held for that purpose, notice of the time and place of holding which shall be given by posting up a written notice thereof signed by the Trustees and particularly stating the object of such meeting in at least three conspicuous places in each district at least ten days before the time of holding such meeting and also publishing a copy of such notice in one or more newspapers published in such districts at least five days before the time of holding said meeting.

Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the Board of Trustees of said School district to execute such bonds for their respective districts as soon as may be after the same are voted to be issued as provided by section three of this act in conformity with such vote and the provisions of this act, and the said bonds so executed and issued shall be transformable by delivery and shall be a valid and binding debt against said School district respectively.

Sec. 5, The Board of Trustees of said School districts are hereby authorized and empowered to levy an annual tax on all the taxable property in their respective districts in addition to the taxes provided by law to be levied sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds by them issued also to levy an additional tax to pay the principal of said bonds as they become due, which taxes shall be levied and collected in the same manner as other School district taxes.

Sec. 6 The provisions of this act shall apply to School district number fifteen in the said County of Blue Earth and the said School District number Sixteen is hereby authorized to issue bonds for the purpose of raising money to build a School house in said district in the like manner as is hereinbefore provided for School district number one in Blue Earth County and number four in Wabasha County to issue bonds for the purpose of raising money in all respects conforming to the provisions of this act provided that such bonds shall be made payable at any time not more than five years thereafter and provided further that the amount of bonds as issued shall not exceed the sum of twelve hundred dollars, and provided further that the provisions in Section three of this act requiring the publication of notices of meeting in one or more newspapers shall not apply to said school district number sixteen.

Sec. 7 this act shall take effect and be force from and after its passage.

Placards posted on the streets in New York, which have attracted much attention, show that the expenses of New York county are, under copperhead administration, $15,000,000 per year $50,000 per week, $7,000 per day, and $83 per minute while during the Republican administration of Adams, the whole cost of the working of the United States government was only about $13,000,000. Wherever the copperheads rule there is prodigality, corruption, peculation and rascality in the management of public affairs. One reason is that few of them own any property; and they want to live by office-holding and peculiation. The one party pays the taxes, and the other eats them—when they have a chance.

IDAHO!

GRAND MASS MEETING AT CITY HALL!

RESOLUTIONS PASSED ASKING CONGRESS FOR AN APPROPRIATION OF $10,000

Speeches by Messrs Branson, Willard Barney, Finch and Seward.

Pursuant to previous notice, the citizens of Mankato assembled in City Hall last Monday evening, to take measures to secure the aid of the General Government in opening and establishing a route to the Idaho gold fields via La Crosse, Winona, Mankato and Fort Thompson in Dakota Territory.

Hon. S. Finch was called to the Chair and S. F. Barney was chosen Secretary. Upon motion, a Committee of three, consisting of J. A. Willard, J. N. Hall and A. D. Seward, was appointed by the Chair to draft and report resolutions expressive of the sentiment of the meeting.

During the absence of the Committee remarks were made by Judge Branson and others, urging a vigorous effort to secure the aid of the Government in giving protection to emigrants over this route.

The committee on resolutions having agreed upon a report came in and reported the following;

WHEREAS, the emigration from the different States to the gold fields of Idaho Territory is expected to be immense during the coming season ; and, whereas, it is important to emigrants to secure the shortest, safest, and most feasible route, and that protection be extended by the Government, so far as may be, to such emigrants ; and, whereas, Congress has by an act approved March 3d 1864, appropriated the sum of forty thousand dollars for the protection of emigrants by the overland routes to the States and Territories of the Pacific, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War : only twenty thousand dollars of which is by said act applied to particular routes, and twenty thousand dollars remains yet unapplied ; and, whereas, it is a fact asserted and acknowledged by all who are acquainted with the different routes that the route from LaCross and Winona on the Mississippi river by Mankato to Fort Thompson on the Miosouri river, thence to the head waters of the Sheyenne river to Bannock City and the gold fields, is at least six hundred miles shorter than either of the other routes, posesses far greater facilities for obtaining wood, water and an abundance of forage, and is less obstructed by streams, and is quite as secure from attacks by hostile Indians as the Southern and far more secure than the Northern route; the protection afforded to emigrants would also afford protection to settlers and open to settlement the vast fertile regions of south western Minnesota and southern Dakotah, therefore

Resolved, that we earnestly solicit the Secretary of War to apply ten thousand dollars of the money appropriated by the said act of Congress above refered to for the protection of emigrants to Idaho on the route from La Crosse and Winona via Mankato and Fort Thompson on the Missouri river, and that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to urge the Secretary of War to make such application of said moneys; and if said moneys shall already be applied to other routes that they be memorialized to urge the passage of an act of Congress making an appropriation of money to said purpose and any other measures which will secure the opening of, and protection of emigrants on said route.

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress and the same with the proceedings of this meeting be furnished to the several newspspers for publication.

Upon a motion to adopt, Judge Finch was called upon, and made some appropriate remarks. Stating that this matter was worthy of our earnest consideration, and if the proper measures are taken, and vigorously carried out, we may yet secure an appropriation for this middle route. He showed clearly that this middle route is 800 miles shorter than the Southern, and 600 miles shorter than the Northern route.

Mr. Willard and Mr. Seward being severally called upon, decided in favor of the project, and stated that it was not merely a local measure, to benefit Mankato, but was sweeping in its results and benefits. It was not Southern Minnesota against Northern Minnesota, but Southern Minnesota in her own behalf. The untold advantages that would accrue to us and this part of the State by having a route established by way of Mankato are not second in importance to even a railroad.

Judge Branson expressed his hearty concurrence in the matter, and said that though not very well posted in the details of this route, he was satisfied that it was of vast importance to Mankato, and to every town along the route from La Crosse. Ever since the return of the expedition to Fort Thompson last fall he had changed his views as to the feasibility and safety of this route, and now believed that the wealth of every man would be doubled by having this emigrant route, established. He approved of the resolutions, and believed that it was not too late yet to secure a part of the forty thousand dollars appropriated by Congress.

Mr. Barney also spoke in favor of the resolutions, and hoped that the newspapers would secure the co-operation of other papers between here and Chicago, in its favor.

The resolutions were unaimnously adopted.

Upon motion, the Committee on Resolutions was retained as a committee on correspondence in furtherance of the project.

The following resolution was then offered and adopted.

Resolved, That as this is a subject that interests the people of the whole of Southern Minnesota, we expect to receive from all a hearty co-operation in securing the object expressed in our resolutions, and do most respectfully extend the invitation to the citizens of the city of La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, and trust that their influence will aid us in accomplishing this object.

Upon motion, the Committee on correspondence was instructed to open correspondence with our Senators and Representatives in Congress, with reference to changing the mail route now advertised by the Post Master Generel from Mankato to Yankton in Dakota Territory, as to extend the route direct to Fort Thomson or Fort Randall.

The meeting then adjourned.

The well known flouring mill and distillery, situated on the Rollingstone creek about midway between Minnesota City and Stockton, were totally destroyed by fire on last Saturday afternoon or evening, together with all the contents. The mill property belonging to Mr. J. P. Beach, of Winona, and the distillery, which stood apart, to Mr. J, W. Downer, also of Winona. There was an insurance on the latter to the amount of $2,000, which, it is thought, will cover Mr. D's loss. Mr. Beach, owner of the mill property, estimates his loss at $10,000, exclusive of the amount covered by insurance.—Winona Rep.

OUGHT TO BE THANKFUL.—During Monday night James Hennesy, in the employ of the Hatch House, found on the streets a gentlemanly attired man in a state of helpless intoxication. He took him to the hotel, but finding it impossible to keep him there, took his purse containing $735, and gave it to the clerk for safety. The man went out and in about two hours was an inmate of the police station, but during that time he had literally 'fallen among thieves,' who had robbed him of everything he had about him. Had it not been for the care of the young man Hennesy the $735 would have shared the same fate.—Chicago Tribune.

THE RESULT OF CARELESSNESS.—On Saturday night last a young man on the front platform of a Madison street car, amused himself by catching hold of the braces and leaning backwards, throwing himself out as far as he could. While in this position a car coming in the opposite direction, struck his head with such force as to knock him completely from his position, injuring him severely. The young man was immediately attended by Dr. Hahn, who pronounces him out of danger. Chicago Tribune.

The Providence Journal says there has just been an examination of the midshipmen connected with the Naval School, which has resulted in the dismissal of twenty-two out of four hundred and forty-eight, the whole number. About twenty others, not having made sufficient proficiency in their studies, were put back into the next lower classes. The regular annual examination commences on the first of June, and will occupy some considerable time, as those having the matter in charge are disposed to make thorough work of it.

A rebel woman writes to her husband in Price's Arkansas army, [the letter having been intercepted] that "Parson Nolan is our circuit rider now. He says that God has plainly promised to be on our side and drive the cursed Yankees from off our soil. Parson Nolan is a splendid preacher, but it don't look to me as if God was driving the Yauks any too much out of Arkansas now."

Mr. Samuel Cox was aggravated again in Congress the other day, by a reference to his youthful indiscrision with the Abysinian. The bill for the territory of Montana was up. Cox objected to the name, and asked if something better couldn't be suggested. Washburn replied that he didn't know but perhaps the name of Abysinia would suit him. Cox then took another track, and wanted it called Douglas Territory 'Oh yes,' growled Thad. Stevens 'with a slight amendment—'Fred Douglas Territory.' Cox was quiet on the questions of names forthwith.

SECESH.—We understand that a chap now in the county jail was of late advised by his counsel to offer himself as a volunteer for his country's service, and thereby gain his freedom and probably save himself from the penitentiary ; but refused, saying if he went into any, it would be the Rebel service !—City Post

During General Sherman's expedition, a wounded Federal officer crawled into the yard of a secesh planter, when the latter took an axe, and, with a fiendishness scarcely credible, struck him on the head killing him instantly. A small party of Federal soldiers coming up shortly after, the negroes told them of it, when they immediately shot the planter and placed him in the house, which they burned to the ground.

There is more nutrition in one pound of cheese than in two pounds of flesh. With us, cheese is regarded rather as a luxury, while in England it is regarded as one of the substantial articles of food, and it is not uncommon for the workmen there to make a full meal on bread and cheese alone.

The St, John [N. B.] Globe, o Thursday, Says : 'The steamer this morning took away a great many passengers. The New Brunswick papers are loudly lamenting the increasing emigration of young men from that province to the United States.

A. D. Seward was nominated on the Peoples' ticket, but declined on the morning of election.

The following is the result:

It was voted to raise the per diem of the Assessor to two dollars per day.

The people also voted to have a Pound; elected T. T. Peirce Pound master, and instructed the Town Board to lease or buy a piece of ground on which to build a pound.

By vote hogs were not allowed to run at large at all, and horses, cattle mules and asses, only from the first of April, to the first of November.

By a vote 350 dollars was appropriated for the support of soldiers families.

A tax of four mills on the dollar was voted for road purposes.

The following were elected Overseers of Roads. District No 1, A. Keene; No 2, J. S. Hinckley; No 3, M. Ulman; No 5, M. Reimbolt; No 6, D R. Brooks.

CAPTURE OF INDIANS.—James K. Wilson, U. S. Scout, informs us that Sergeant Ellis and three men of Co G. Sixth Regiment, captured a band of seven squaws, five papooses, and one Indian boy aged about fifteen years, last Friday, on the Big Cottonwood near Sleepy Eye Lake. Their tent was first discovered in a thicket by a Frenchman who was out trapping. He gave the information to the soldiers in camp at Chanyuska, and a party of four went out to capture them.

As soon as they saw the party of soldiers, they endeavored to effect their escape and ran into an old house near by. They had no arms, and were almost destitute of provisions, and said that a party of eight more would camp in the same place in eight days from that time, which would be to day. They were taken into camp, and from thence to Fort Ridgely.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.—At a meeting of the members of Mankato Hook and Ladder Co held April 7th, the following were elected officers for the ensuing year.

President—Z. Paddock.

Vice Pres—J. R. Brink.

Secretary—J. J. Porter.

Asst Sec—Jas. Shoemaker.

Directors—J. Shoemaker, E. Bradley, S. Randall, C. Christensen, and J. C. Wise.

Committee to receive proposals for Membership—W. Irving, W. Bradley, and D. Wilcox.

OUR readers will observe from the proceedings of the School meeting published elsewhere, that the educational prospects of Mankato are in the ascendant. We have seldom witnessed more unanimity of feeling in a matter of such importance when it was expected that strong opposition would be made. A school house like the one which it is proposed to build will go far towards inducing people to settle in our midst, where their children can have the advantage of a graded school and competent teachers. We are assured that no time will be lost in taking the necessary steps to build the house.

VERNON, April 5th 1864.

MR. EDITOR.—You were so indulgent as to insert an article from me in your issue of March 24th which resulted in a waste of stationary by my friend Clark, of Garden City, and now let me say my say once more, and I will not encroach upon your time and space again. Mr. C. tells our Supervisors, very innocently, that they can have these men, (Ward and Bell) by claiming them, and makes affidavit that one of them belongs to this town. Now does anybody suppose that these men were placed to the credit of Watonwan without an affidavit from some leading citizen of that place, testifying that they belonged there? And when our worthy Chairman says in his affidavit that Watonwan has no business with them, he simply admits that the charges I preferred against his little City can be sustained by the facts.

Now, Mr. Editor, you know I am to have a diploma for my "excessive ignorance," and therefore you will not be surprised when I ask why Mr. C. characterizes my article as insolent &c., after admitting that I told the simple truth. In conclusion, I wish to say that Vernon is now all right on the draft question, and stands credited with more than her quota under all calls. H.

COUNTY BRIDGES.—The result of the vote on county bridges is not as satisfactory as we hoped it would be. The vote polled is light, as some towns, confident of its success, did not turn out more than half their strength, while other towns, determined to defeat it, made every man available. There are some objectionable features in the bill authorizing the issuance of bridge bonds, and for that reason, if for no other, we are not so sure but that the project ought to be defeated.

No one doubts the imperative need of bridges in this county. We must have them. The business of the county demands it, and they will be built sooner or later. If they were built this season the county would be none the poorer ten years hence.

We have received only partial returns, as follows:

	For.	Ag'st
Mankato,	94	98
South Bend,	3	69
Garden City,	60	1
Vernon,	46
Lime,	1	46
Le Ray,		23

THE LADY'S FRIEND FOR APRIL.—The April number of this new two dollar magazine opens with a charming steel engraving called "Harry and his Dog." This is followed by a beautiful Double Fashion Plate, also engraved on steel in the best style. Then we have two companion engravings which will touch the hearts of all mothers, called "The Wanderer" and "The Restored." The music of this number is the popular song by Ednor Rossiter, "I Loved that Dear Old Flag the Best," and is of itself worth the price of the number.

The literature of this number is 'Our Ned,' 'Above the Clouds by Night,' illustrated by a striking engraving; 'Foreshadowings,' by Clara Augusta; 'Mistaken Duty,' by Ida Mason; 'Good-by,' by Mrs. L. J Rittenhouse; 'Mable's Mission,' 'Jenny Morris's Trip to California,' by Mrs. Margaret Hosmer; 'The Transformed Village,' illustrated by an engraving, &c. The Novelties, Work-Table and Flower Department are all illustrated by finely executed wood cuts.

Published by Deacon & Peterson, 319 Walnut St. Philadelphia. $2,00 a year.

In West Mankato, the officers elected are as follows:

Director—S. M. Walker.

HOSTETTER'S Celebrated Stomach Bitters is one of the greatest strengthening preparations extant. It is especially adapted to those who are afflicted with the Fever and Ague, or any other disease arising from a disordered condition of the digestive organs. For the Fever and Ague there is perhaps no medicine in the world equal to it, as it enters, purifies and replenishes the blood, which is so important to bring about a healthy action in diseases of this nature. The Bitters are now among the most popular, and at the same time, valuable specifics in the medical world. In recommending it to the public, we are fully conscious of doing them a great service, knowing, as we do, their many excellent qualities, and sure and speedy action in all cases where the disease is caused by irregularity of the digestive organs. A trial will suffice for the most skeptical. ☞ See advertisement.

FINKLE & LYON'S

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do; will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tention, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood: and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

PLEASE CALL AND EXAMINE, OR SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Boodily Weakness whether iuherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparations contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes. Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health, within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dyspepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs: Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of billions colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocenous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

Poetry.

BE A WOMAN.

Oft I've heard a gentle mother,
As the twilight hours began,
Pleading with a son on duty,
Urging him to be a man.
But unto her blue-eyed daughter,
Though with love's words quite as ready,
Points she out the other duty,
"Strive my dear to be a lady!"

What's a lady? Is it something
Made of hoops, and silks, and airs,
Used to decorate the parlor,
Like the fancy rags and chairs?
Is it one that wastes on novels,
Every feeling that is human?
If 'tis this to be a lady,
'Tis not this to be a woman.

Mother, then, unto your daughter
Speak of something higher far,
Than to be mere fashion's lady—
"Woman" is the brightest star.
If ye, in your strong affection,
Urge your son to be a true man,
Urge your daughter no less strongly
To rise up and be a woman.

Yes, a woman—brightest model
Of that light and perfect beauty;
There the mind, the soul, the body,
Blend to work out life's great duty—
Be a woman—naught is higher
On the gilded list of fame;
On the catalogue of virtue
There's no holier, brighter name.

Be a woman—on to duty,
Raise the world from all that's low,
Place high in the social heaven
Virtue's fair and radiant bow!
Lend thy influence to each effort
That shall raise our effort human;
Be not fashion's gilded lady.
Be a brave, true, whole-souled woman.

MAUD GRAHAM'S COUSIN,

OR

Killing Two Birds With One Stone.

BY MRS. RACHEL RICHELIEU.

Frank Graham was a brave, generous and wholesouled young man, handsome as he could possibly be, and loving, to a degree that amounted to a fault. (as my brief story will show) inasmuch as he loved every form that wore 'skirticoats, from the loveliest lady in his acquaintance down to Biddy, the cook; but when he brought home his lovely little bride Maud Elsley, she was par excellence, the reigning queen of his heart. He had been tacitly betrothed to her for years, even when they were respectively in roundabout jackets and pantaletts, and Frank had carried her books to and from school as gallantly as he could now do. But in the intervening year he had had as many flirtations and coquettes feminine; hair-breadth escapes from matrimony, and I fear I must record it, some smashed hearts' laid to his charge; but he always returned to the same starting point to wit: The 'pretty bib apron strings,' of Maud Elsley; she of all others controlled his truest, best and deepest feelings. But many a heartache had he given her! but she, little witch, knew just how to win him back again for she flirted desperately, when he happened to be by, on such occasions But her patience was well nigh exhausted, when a few months prior to their marriage he got into an almost serious entanglement with the reigning belle of the season, and it was then she vowed to end his inconstancy by bidding him adieu forever, even if it broke her own little heart; she had vowed to him she had lost all the esteem she had ever had for him, and that she would go into no partnership for a man's affections: and it would have taken more eloquence than he possessed to win her over again, if her own heart had not plead so strongly for a handsome sinner; and the end was, he was obliged bongre malgre to take her to his bosom then as a safe-guard against future flirtations or lose her altogether.

They were very, very happy together in their new relation, for some months; the fact that she was peculiar property, enhanced her value in his eyes, and he felt—as is the inevitable result of matrimony that has the pure love for a basis,—that she was far dearer now than ever before though he had thought she could not be more essential to his happiness, before marriage; and indeed time revealed many a virtue and deeper sentiment than he had given her credit for possessing, All this was nice if it had had no untoward interruption; but alas! his old propensity returned, when an old schoolmate, and friend of Maud's, Miss Barbara Sheldon, arrived from the South, to spend a few months with her, after having written to that effect.

Many misgivings had Maud of her coming, for she was a belle, and a beauty, and withal a heartless coquette All went well for a week of two; her husband paid her guest scrupulous attention it is true, but that was only right, and what she would have him do, and she really began to enjoy the more exciting pleasures they entered to make her friend's stay pleasant, and she was enjoying her society very much when (loves eyes are quick)-she fancied he lingered long in turning her music, bending so low over her that her curls brushed his handsome whiskers; and she caught him gazing so admirably into her splendid eyes, and oftimes thought they shone with a tender light; but at first, she put such thoughts away from her, thinking that past experience caused her to watch him more jealously, and she would not wrong him, now that such feelings in him would be criminal.

Thus a few days more passed, and she was perpetually tormented by 'passages of love' between the two, and she could no longer be mistaken; and after a day of more than usual trial to the little wife, causing her to exclude herself in her own room on the plea of a bad headache, they had taken advantage of her indisposition and gone to the Opera, after sending up their 'regrets' that she was too ill to accompany them; yet not asking her to do so. She had indiscreetly done as they wished her to, withdrawn and left them alone.

As the noise of the carriage wheels lessened in the distance she mastered her tears, and her indignation grew accordingly. Just then her maid opened the door and said 'there was a lady below, who had just arrived by a western train, and was sure she would let her come up, if she (Maud) were too ill to come down,' and told her to say it was her cousin 'Sue Meadows.'

Up sprang Maud and down stairs she ran, with what would have been with some folks, more haste than grace but little Maud could do nothing ungracefully, even if she did take two steps for one as she hurried to meet her cousin; she rushed into her arms without speaking a word, but her feelings expressed themselves in her actions, as she threw her arm around Sue's neck.

'Why my dear little coz,' said Sue 'what a fever you have, I am afraid you are too ill to come down; tears, as I am alive, and a copious flow at that, if I'm any judge of water-works she continued, as she wheeled Maud under the chandelier to obtain a better sight of her.

'Now, little Maud Graham I must know the mystery of this; and not out of the honey-moon yet; why I thought you was so happy from your letters, that I had serious ideas,—if you can believe Sue Meadows ever had a serious idea,—of perpetrating matrimony some day, only the fiancee has yet to be found,' and with great sang froid she whisked her on a sofa and seating herself beside her, told her she was ready to be informed of Mr. Frank Grahams misdemeanor, for 'a man is always at the bottom of a woman's tears,' she affirmed; 'she had not lived with a married sister five years for nothing: she was au fait in reading signs matrimonial.'

Thus prompted Maud told the only one she could have told her troubles to, the cause of her grief; yet woman-like wound up by blaming herself more than she did him, for being too jealous.

Sue heard all this with composure as she leisurely gave her things to Maud's maid, just showing she was listening, and commenting, in her own mind by a little nod and grant now and then.

As Maud concluded, she took her by the shoulders, and forcing her to look her in the face said, 'and so little wife thinks it her 'best card' to withdraw and leave them to enjoy each others company, while she is spoiling her beauty and bright eyes, crying for the graceless scamp!'

'O Sue, don't blame him so hard; he was so good before she came, and she is charming, and besides it is a way he has, and always had,' said Maud.

'A way he has, is it? Couldn't stand temptation, could he? Well, I think there is a 'Balm in Gilead' for you, and a lesson he could, would, and should learn, and the 'quicker the sooner,'

'O, I shall not mention it to him now,' said Maud, alarmed. 'I could quarrel with him, and give him the same 'medicine' before we were married, but I can do neither now, for he knows I am caged safe.'

'Leave it to me, Maud, I will see to his case, and no time like the present I have always found,' said Sue, and ringing for Maud's maid, Bessie, she told her to bring the wrappings she just laid aside, and also her own, as she wanted her to accompany her a short time,

'What do you mean, Sue, where are you going?' said Maud anxiously.

'Wait here one-half hour, my dear coz, and I'll be back to tell you,' said Sue and she was obliged to be content with this, for Sue, taking Bessie, left the house.

Anxiously she watched the hands of the little French clock on the mantle, but she was forced to curb her impatience for almost another half-hour, when she heard their welcome footsteps in the hall.

'Come to your room, coz, for we have no time to lose,' said Sue, and Maud followed passively; and it is doubtful if she would have refused this wild, decided, Amazonish young lady her head' that night. Her maid followed, carrying quite a heavy bundle.

Sue Meadows was an orphan and heiress, and a very self-willed one she was too, She was now of age, and the possessor of a splendid fortune, and she could do as she liked, and what most people could not; for, with her fortune, and 'position,' who would not think everything she did, saus dout the most perfect way of doing it. She was tall, but finely formed, with eyes of midnight hue, that twinkled like stars on a winter's night; to-night they fairly scintilated with fun and fire.

In half an hour from the time they had gone to Maud's room, there came out of it what appeared to be a gentleman, Maud and Bessie, the latter, with her round, fat face, quivering all over with mirth. They descended to the drawing-room, and seated themselves very affectionately close together on a sofa.

'Now Maud, introduce me to Bessie as though she was your delectable husband,' said the gentleman, 'just to get used to it, you know.'

'Frank, this is cousin Jack Meadows, of whom you have heard me speak so often,' said Maud, and the 'gentleman' bowed very smilingly, and arose to shake hands with the imaginary individual. It was done very decorously by 'Mr. Jack,' but not so Maud; her laugh rang through the house, before she hardly finished speaking.

'Perfectly right, my dear, but not quite so loud,' said the 'gentleman.' 'You may smile if you can't help it, and I suppose it will be taken for a proof that you are very glad to see your cousin Jack, but I beg you will restrain yourself sufficiently to keep up your dignity,' he added, pompously, and stroking his handsome whiskers, a la masculine; he was a handsome, fashionably dressed young man, with eyes that looked very like Sue Meadows', only he made a much more grandly handsome man than she was a woman. They had not heard the carriage stop at the door, but it so happened that a couple from the Opera stood on the steps, when Maud's laugh rang out to them.

'Mrs. Graham seems to have recovered from her headache,' said Miss Sheldon, in dulcet tones; 'I suppose she has company.'

'I hope she has spent the evening as agreeably as I have done,' said Frank, warmly, as he slightly pressed the little hand that hung on his arm; 'and I don't like the interruption of this company to it,' he added, as he rang the bell.

Maud and Jack had just time to resume their affectionate position, as they came into the parlor. Miss Sheldon swept in with exquisite grace, in full 'Opera dress,' and certainly looked very lovely, as she stooped beneath the gas light,—no doubt for effect, seeing a strange gentleman there—and waited an introduction.

Mrs Graham went through the presentation with a grace, that did honor to her teacher. She looked very glad to see them, and very proud of the handsome stranger she called cousin; so her husband thought, with a little pang, as he marked how fascinating he was, and he also noticed that his wife was in full dress, and looking exquisitely beautiful, her smiles bringing out all her dimples and a delicate flush upon her cheek.

She asked them how they enjoyed the Opera, and 'hoped they did not hurry home because she had the headache;' she believed 'the surprise, and pleasure of seeing cousin Jack had driven it quite away,' turning a beaming smile upon the said Jack, who was stroking his glossy black whiskers, and who threw back as fond a smile.

'The coxcomb,' muttered Frank under his breath.

At this moment Miss Sheldon proposed music, as in this she knew she excelled, and she wished to display her 'powers' to the handsome cousin, for she was 'born and bread' a coquette, and it mattered not how many were around her, she would have coquetted with them all. Frank crossed over to turn her music, and soon mingled his rich voice with hers, and they soon appeared oblivious to the presence of Maud and Jack, for Miss Barbara had chosen a love song, of 'Hopes Forever Withered,' and 'Dark Despair of Hearts.'

Mr. Jack Meadows' face was eloquent, as with compressed lip, he turned a meaning smile on Maud, then as oblivious, apparently, of the party as the piano, as they were of them, they held a low and partly whispered conversation; a fact which Barbara commented upon to Frank, in a low tone, at the conclusion of the 'musical performance.' When they looked at them, Jack was just bending his graceful head to say something particularly low and sweet, judging from the color in her face, which was really called there by the consciousness that her husband was observing her. Frank could have pulled his nose from him, but he turned to his 'consoler.' Miss Sheldon, in no very amaible frame of mind, and covertly watched them with jealous eyes.

After a while Mr. Jack Meadows made his adieu in a very Frenchified but graceful and winning manner, giving his hand to Miss Sheldon, as he wished her good night, and hoping for a farther acquaintance. He bent over his cousin's hand. and touched it to his lips, and ,bowing gracefully to Mr. Graham, whom he also hoped he should 'have the pleasure of meeting on the morrow,' he departed—from the room at least—for Bessie was near at hand, per agreement, and opened and shut the hall door, as though he passed out, but in reality conducted him up to the third floor, where a warm, comfortable room was ready for him. He had declined to be a guest at his cousin's before Frank, saying he had 'business' that would make it more convenient to lodge at a hotel.' He did this to facilitate their plans.

Shortly after, Miss Sheldon retired also, after pronouncing Maud's cousin a 'love of a man;' an opinion that Frank did not endorse, if we judge from his remarks, when he and Maud were left alone.

'Yes, he has plenty of conceit. and aplomb, this cousin of yours, qualities by the way, that make up a 'love of a man,' in the estimation of your sex.'

'And what qualities best recommend our sex to yours?, said Maud.

'I should judge they think flirting does, by the way they all have of engaging in it,' returned Frank, tartly.

'Well, I suppose they find gentlemen enough to help them, or they could not do it,' said Maud with a little yawn.

Frank scanned her face to see if she had a hidden meaning to her words, but could make nothing of her careless looking face.

'I am sorry you don't like Jack, poor fellow, be is so kind-hearted, and affectionate. and he is handsome, certainly, and intelligent; and besides you ought to like my cousin, who has come so far to see me, too,' she said, with another yawn, as though she was careless of winning his kind regards for her cousin, and was tired of the subject.

Frank winced at her eulogy of him and her don't-care whether-you-like-him-or-not way; she had drawn a chair up to the grate, and seated herself in it, tipping back with her tiny feet on the fender; not a graceful attitude for most people, but it was so for little Maud, with the soft folds of her crimson dress falling on each side of her; she looked like a snow flake in a crimson cloud; her arms and neck were bare, and white and soft as an infant's; and after Miss Sheldon's regal beauty, and charming manner were out of sight, Frank just worshiped Maud's loveliness Looking at her now, a flood of tenderness was in his heart, as he bent over her and said, softly;

'I will like him if it will please you, ma petite, but I don't want him to be quite so sweet and Frenchy to my little wife.'

'Step off my dress, Frank; you will soil it,' she carelessly answered, as she gathered it up, and arose, adding, 'I am so tired I believe I will go to bed, good night, if you are not going,' and she passed out of the room.

How he missed the pressure of those little white arms around his neck, that he was wont to receive every night, when alone. He looked after her, surprised that she should leave him so.

'Was she grown indifferent?' He thought if she had anything to complain of, —and his conscience told him she had—she would have spit it out, for she was a fiery little thing.

'No she was not angry with me, only indifferent. By George, if Mr. Meadows comes here again I'll have him kicked out, the jackanapes!' he muttered, working himself into a rage, and pacing the floor. Here conscience stepped in and urged her claim, something in this way; She was loving and attentive to all my wants, until I have left her alone so much of late, and because she could not stand the fatigue of so much dissipation as Miss Sheldon, I have, instead of abating those pleasures, left her to herself, and still accompanied her friend in a ceasless round of pleasure, the escort of the Belle of the season; now perhaps she has turned to some one else for sympathy. Conscience perhaps did not analyze this as plainly, but he felt every word of it, and more.

He started for his wife's rooms, with the determination to be more attentive, and regain what he had lost.

As he opened the door, Maud was softly singing 'withered hopes, and dark despair;' was it accidental or designed? He could not think it was the latter, for it was not like her natural, frank disposition. Perhaps it was the bitter feeling of her heart too; the thought that she was bound to one man who did not love her, and herself loving another man, or fast learning to.

Thus thought Frank, as he stood a moment in the door.

She stopped singing as he entered, but did not stop her employment before the glass, of putting up her long brown curls, in a net nor turn her eyes on him.

'Does your head ache now, Maud?' he said, as he seated himself in an easy chair, by the little stand where she stood. 'Not bad thank you,' she said, politely, and added, 'will you be so kind as to turn down the gas, Frank, the glare rather hurts my eyes.' But this was in reality, that he might not see her emotion.

How she longed to sit on his lap, and be petted as he used to pet her before Barbara came; but she knew the lesson was but just begun, and if he would pet her to-night, because his feelings had been a little stirred, he would be just as careless of her to-morrow when Barbara was near him, and perhaps more so if he thought he could pet her or let it alone, as he pleased.

No she would show him he could not, so she bravely smuggled away the dew drops in her eyes, and complaining of weariness, quietly bade him good night and started to go to the inner room to bed, leaving Frank sitting there; but before she reached the door, he was by her side and his arms around her closing her in a close embrace.

'Has my little wife no kiss for me, to-night?' he asked reproachfully. 'O. I forgot,' she said, smiling a little, and dutifully—not lovingly—kissed him; and he felt the difference as he released her almost pushing her from him. She went in and shut the door and gave way to the sobs that could no longer be repressed.

Frank's reflections that night, as he paced the floor where she had left him, were not sweet, to say the least but the bewildering smiles of Miss Sheldon. the next morning caused him to forget Maud, entirely, as he met her in the garden for an early walk, before breakfast as had been agreed upon the evening before.

They took the path leading to the greenhouse and a pair of sharp eyes watched them from the third story, as they slowly rambled on.

The owner of these eyse quickly made up his toilet and desended to Maud's room,

'Bonjouv mon chere cousine,' he said on entering. As tu bien dormi?' asked Maud as she kissed him.

—Strange proceedings.— 'Encore un plassir pourtoi, Maud,' said he.

'Quel bonheur moi qui mourais d'envie d'y aller,' replied Maud in the same gay tone. 'Dress quickly and prettily, and we too will take the morning air little coz, said Jack 'or stay he added 'don your riding dress and I will go and send orders to the groom to bring the saddle horses to the door. He performed his promise and when he retured Maud was dressed.

It Won't Do.

It won't do to do a great many things in this world, for instance:

It won't do to denounce false teeth in the presence of dentists, nor in the presence of old maids who have not had a sound tooth in their heads for a quarter of a century.

It won't do to talk about horn flints and wooden nutmegs, when there are Connecticut Yankees about.

It won't do to imagine a Legislature will compel the banks to resume when three-fourths of the members are among those who will suffer the most, if forced to pay their debts instanter.

It won't do to pull a man's nose until you are fully satisfied he has not spunk enough to resent it by blowing your brains out.

It won't do for a fellow who is so drunk that he cannot see a hole through a ladder to attempt to stand on the top of a lamp-post, or fire plug, and make a speech to the multitude.

It won't do to throw off flannel shirts on a warm day in January, in full belief that there'll be no cold weather until another winter.

It won't do to get too near the heels of a Jackass, who has been taught to kick at strangers.

It won't do for a man to bump his head against a stone wall, unless he is completely convinced that his head is the hardest.

Finally, it won't do to draw the conclusion that our stock of 'it won't do's' is exhausted, just because we happen to think it won't do to give our readers a large dose at this time.

Fashionable Women.

Fashion kills more women than toil and sorrow. Obedience to fashion is a greater transgression of woman's nature, a greater injury to her physical and mental constitution, than the hardships of poverty and neglect. The slave woman at her task will live and grow old, and see two or three generations of her mistresses fade and pass away. The washerwoman, with scarce a ray of hope to cheer her in her toils, will live to see her fashionable sisters all die around her. The kitchen maid is hearty and strong, when her lady has to be nursed like a sick baby.

It is a sad truth that fashion-pampered women are almost worthless for all the good ends of human life. They have but little force of character they have still less power of moral will, and quite as little physical energy. They live for no great purpose in life; they accomplish no worthy ones. They are only doll-forms in the hands of milliners and servants, to be dressed and fed to order. They dress nobody; they feed nobody; they instruct nobody, they bless nobody. They write no books; they set no rich examples of virtue and womanly life. If they rear children servants and nurses do all, save to give them birth. And when reared what are they? What do they ever amount to, but scions of the old stock? Who ever heard of a fashionable woman's child exhibiting any virtue and power of mind for which it became eminent? Read the biographies of our great and good men and women. Not one of them had a fashionable mother. They all sprang from strong minded women. who had as little to do with fashion as with the change of clouds.

Boys Help Your Mothers.

We have seen from two to six great hearty boys sitting by the kitchen stove, toasting their feet, and cracking nuts or jokes. while their mother a slender woman, has gone to the wood pile for wood, to the well for water or to the meat house for frozen steak for breakfast. This is not as it should be. There is much work about the house too hard for a woman. Heavy lifting, hard extra steps, which should be done by those more able. Boys. don't let your mother do it all, especially if she is a feeble woman. Dull prosy housework is irksome enough at the best It is long work, too, it being impossible to tell when it is done, and then on the morrow the whole is to be gone over with again. There is more of it than one is apt to think. We wish some busy all-day housekeeper, the arrangement of whose house is about as inconvenient as it can be—a not uncommon state of things—would count her steps in one day, and let us have the result in miles; let it be noted how many times from the stove to the wood pile, to the pump, up and down stairs, and especially how many times to the buttery.—Morning Star.

WORSHIP GOD WITH FLOWERS.—Flowers are the memories of childhood, which accompany us from the cradle to the grave. I left my birthplace at the age of seventeen, yet the peonies, tulips and roses of my mothers garden are picturedin my mind with a vernal freshness. Teach your children to love flowers; and they will love home and all its inmates. Beautify the grounds around your dwelling with rich foliage, plants, and the bright blossoms of sweet flowers, and the faces of all who look upon the scene will be lighted with smiles, while their hearts will worship the great Giver of all great and perfect gifts to man. If I could be the means of creating a general taste for gardening and love of flowers, I should feel as though I had been of more benefit to my country than all the military heroes of the present age Worship God with flowers. As he loves all that is beautiful and good, so will He love you as you make your home lovely.

THE JOLLY MILLER.—One evening, at a country ale house, an itinerant chiropodist, a cobbler, and a market gardner had been edifying the assembled company with a lengthy debate —more remarkable for noise than logic—upon their respective claims to precedence as benefactors of the public at large, and wound up their argument by appealing to their listeners for a verdict. A very jolly miller, the king of the village, begged leave to offer himself as the only man present fully competent to give a correct opinion on the subject discussed, inasmuch as he possessed a practical knowledge of each disputant's handicraft; for he was well skilled in reducing corns, had used up many lasts in his lifetime, and was first-rate at setting a water-mill on.

Cotton having abdicated, Iron is king: but it is not settled whether in plates or balls.

A physician has discovered that the nightmare in nine cases out of ten is produced by owing a bill for a newspaper, and that the best cure is to pay up.

If you would render your children helpless all their lives, never compel or permit them to help themselves.

Those who walk most are generally healthiest; the road of perfect health is too narrow for wheels.

How is the market, neighbor? Very quiet. Anything doing in cheese? Not a mite.

An elderly gentleman, accustomed to "indulge," entered the room of a certain inn, where sat a grave friend by the fire. Lifting a pair of green spectacles upon his forehead, rubbing his inflamed eyes, and calling for hot water and brandy, he complained that "his eyes were getting weaker and weaker, and that even spectacles didn't seem to do them any good." "I'll tell thee, friend," said the Quaker, "what I think. If thee was to wear thy spectacles over thy mouth for a few months, thy eyes would get round again.'

The Weekly Union.

United States Official Paper.

Mankato, Friday, April 15, 1864.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1864,

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

IDAHO VIA WINONA AND MANKATO.

The Feasibility of the Middle Route to the Gold Fields of Idaho.

That there is to be immense emigration the present season from the Atlantic slope to the newly discovered gold fields of Idaho is no longer problematical. Whether this emigration will wend its way to the new Eldorado by the most feasible route remains to be seen. We propose this week, to briefly discuss the advantages offered by the route via Winona and Mankato to Fort Thompson at the mouth of Crow river, on the Missouri, and shall not take into consideration the probabilities as to what direction the travel west of the Missouri will take, as that Territory may be the theater of Indian hostilities the coming season. Should the Indians conclude to fight emigrants must consult their safety by following in the wake of Gen. Sully's army; and we claim for this route the solid advantage of being the nearest to the immediate proximity of his forces.

Mankato is in the heart of a fine food producing region, and emigrants can procure supplies of all kinds in abundance here and save hauling them from a long distance, as they would have to do by going through Iowa.

We say nothing about the Northern route, as it is too circuitous for any one to seriously contemplate journeying over it, and, in addition, provisions would have to be purchased in St. Paul, as that whole northern frontier is destitute of supplies.

Application has been made to the Secretary of War for a part of the amount appropriated by Congress for the protection of emigrants to the gold fields, and the application will probably be successful. Whether it is or not, there is no apprehension of danger this side of the Missouri, as far South as Fort Thompson. The Indian supply train, which left this place last November, has demonstrated the practicability of this route, and, has made a good wagon road all the way through.

But, in order that the public may judge of the advantages this line of travel has over any other, we give below a statement of the distance to Fort Thompson from Winona, and Dubuque.

Dubuque to Sioux City	300	miles.
Sioux City to Fort Thompson	240	"
Total	540
Winona to Mankato	144	miles
Mankato to Fort Thompson	260	"
Total	404

Difference in favor of the great Central Route via Winona and Mankato, 136 miles.

The day is not far distant when this will become the great thoroughfare for the throng of gold diggers who will push out to this land of promise. A large number will doubtless make a start this year, but not a tithe of what will go next season if reports continue favorable,—the Indians punished, and treated with, as will undoubtedly be the case the coming campaign.

The American Conflict.

The conflict between Freedom and Slavery, extending through the entire period of our national independence, and culminating in the most gigantic and unjustifiable rebellion on record, affords material of intense interest for the historian's widest scope.

The History of the Great Rebellion in the United States, written by Horace Greely, showing its causes, incidents, and results, and intended to exhibit especially its moral and political phases, with the drift and progress of American opinion respecting Slavery from 1776 to 1864, is one calculated to inspire more than general interest in the minds of the great mass of American people, and throughout Europe. Mr. Greely's familiarity with the political history of the country, his exhaustless fund of statistical information, his independence, and fearlessnes, and unyielding integrity to his convictions as a political writer and public speaker, all contribute to gaurantee this work to be one of no common interest, and to insure an eager desire among both friends and opponents to see and peruse the history of this struggle from the standpoint of the American journalist.

The advance sheets of Mr. Greely's great work, published in pamphlet form, containing one hundred and forty-four pages, we have perused carefully, and we believe it to be indispensable to the library of every man who is interested in the history of his country. The author is known the world over as a writer of great ability, and the task of writing this History could not have been confided to better hands.

The work will be printed on fine paper, and issued in two large double-column octavo volumes of six hundred pages each, abundantly illustrated by Maps, Diagrams of Battle-fields, sieges, naval conflicts, views of places of historic interest, obtained from official reports and other authentic documents in the War and Navy Departments, together with a large number of fine steel plate portraits of prominant generals, and other distinguished persons connected with the, war both North and South.

Volume first will be published about July 1st, and the second volume as soon as practicable after the war is over. The price will be for the regular edition in cloth $3,50; in leather, $4,00; extra fine library style, bound in calf, $6,00. Geo. Sherwood & Co., Chicago are the Western Publishers.

Settlement of Town Site Claims.

The settlement of the greater portion of the town site claims of Mankato, is a matter of general interest to all throughout the State. Nearly all of the Leech interest has been settled. Before the death of Samuel Leech he gave a deed of trust to J. J. Anderson to secure the payment of a large amount of money. This deed was foreclosed on Monday last, and the property bid off by the Sheriff to the highest bidders. All the bidders were actual settlers. The amount of the sales made was about $15,000, covering between forty and fifty lots.

County School Superintendents.

A law was passed by the Legislature last winter giving power to the Board of County Commissioners of Blue Earth County, to appoint a Superintendent of Schools. Several counties have done so. Would it not be well for our County Commissioners to bear this matter in mind at their next meeting, and appoint a man to superintend the educational interests of this county.

The Ninth Regiment,

We copy the following from a Kansas journal concerning the above regiment. "It was recruited in the Summer of 1862, in the rural districts of Minnesota and consists of stalwart farmers, mechanics and laboring men of Minnesota. From the same brave and hardy classes the recruiting officers have enlisted enough to fill up the regiment to the maximum number allowed. They are stationed at various places in Kansas, and the people appear to be highly gratified with their soldierly bearing, they have attained a high position in their confidence.

NEWSPAPER CHANGES.—Wm. G. Dye, one of the proprietors of the Winona Republican has disposed of his interest in that paper to Sheldon C. Carey, a young man who has been employed in the office for a number of years, and is familiar with its details. We are well acquainted with friend Carey, and it affords us pleasure to thus note his prosperity.

The St. Paul Press has been enlarged to an eight column paper—one column having been added to each page.

The Glencoe Register is now in blast again,—with an old typo at its head—R. H Ogburn, Esq. We are sorry to lose the editorial services of Colonel Stevens, who is one of the pioneer editors of Minnesota, and we are glad that Ogburn is "full of sorts." Welcome then to the ranks.

A. R. McGill, Esq. of St. Peter has purchased an interest in the St. Peter Tribune with Mr. Williams, and will have the management of its editorial columns during Mr. W's absence. He is a gentleman of education and ability, and the readers of the Tribune have reason to congratulate themselves on securing his services.

THE St. Cloud Times is the name of a new paper to take the place of the Union. It is a neat looking sheet, and promises a much better appearance when all its new material arrives. The only objectionable feature we notice in it is the name of that traitor George B. McClellan hoisted as a candidate for the Presidency.

A stage passenger who recently came from Rochester by way of Mankato to St. Peter, says that at every place where the stage stopped the passengers had a petition for the proposed change in our Land Grant Railroads thrust before them to sign. This is a novel way for the Mankato people to obtain signers to their petitions. If they could secure copies of the Wisconsin poll lists and transfer the names, it might save much valuable time and useless expense.—St. Peter Statesman.

Exactly! You doubtless had the matter of "time and expense" in view when you got up your remonstrance, as a St. Peterite said he could and did take old Chicago and St. Louis directories, and in an hour and a half made out a list of two hundred names.

That's a "novel way" and that's where you got your 15,000 signers.

News and Other Items.

The Volunteer published at Red Wing says "One hundred and six men of the Second Regiment stopped at Red Wing over Sunday, on their way to the scene of conflict. The ladies following the general impulses of their nature, provided them something to eat at Sterling Hall. When they left, Monday morning, they gave three cheers for Red Wing that will long be remembered. But they expressed their sentiments for St. Paul in quite a different way. For that saintly city they gave three groans. Neither the 2d nor the 3d Regiment like the manner of their reception at St. Paul.

The London News of March 11 says: 'Among the passengers for New York which left Southampton yesterday in the Germania, was Mr. Hauteville, an American gentleman on his way from Marseilles, with the corpse of his wife. She was the daughter of Ex-Governor Fish, and was one of the most beautiful women in the United States. At the magnificent ball given at New York to Prince of Wales Miss Fish led off the ball with His Royal Highness.

Edward Everett says that 'when the history of East Tennessee for the first two years and a half of the war shall be written, it will disclose scenes of tyranny and oppression of which there are few parallels in the annals of the world; and this at the hands of men who pretend to be waging war for self-government, and to protect the rights of the minority against the rule of a 'numerical majority.'

A female vampyre was discovered a day or two ago in St. Louis. A young Swiss woman from the Canton of Berne, afflicted with what she called 'a dancing of the heart,' was so superstitious as to believe that the blood of a man who had been hanged would cure her, and hearing that one Abshier had been sentenced to death by court martial, she applied to the jailor to assist her. TEN-FORTIES.—Our people show the same avidity for the new ten-forty bonds that characterized their taking of the five-twenties. Mr. Cisco advertised them for subscription on the 24th; on the 25th over one million had been subscribed for. They meet with the same confidence the same earnestness of investment, as the previous issue. We understand that Secretary Chase is making preparations for the issue of gold notes, receivable for duties, which he proposes to pay for the interest falling due before and on January 1, 1865, without rebate and on July 1, and will rebate at the rate of three per cent. per annum on interest due after that date.—State Atlas.

ST. ANTHONY.—By the payment of liberal bounties, St. Anthony is relieved from her deficiency and the impending draft. The deceased and Mr. Barden were chopping timber on the Reservation. They had chopped one tree which in falling lodged upon another; they chopped the other till they both fell. While the trees were falling for some unaccountable reason he undertook to pass under the tree which had lodged, when the tree struck him on the head and killed him almost instantly. A Novel Project.

Another New York Railroad project! Not Broadway—not "Crosstown"—not through any avenue, or street, or lane or passage, actual or mythical—but a railway under the city. The scheme is headed by some of the first men of the city, and a bill authorizing it has been introduced into the Legislature.

The idea of tunnelling the great Metropolis, and of having the steam horse snorting and wheezing under peoples' cellars—under the sewers and drains of the town even—is some thing startling, but it is novel. Londen is pierced by subteranean Railways, and they are found to work so admirably, that they are prefered by those going from one part of the city to the other, as more quiet and comfortable than above ground conveyances.

The tunnel of the principal line is, we believe, some thirty feet below the surface—passes under some of the main sewers—has a double track, and is brilliantly lighted with gas. To show the success of the project, the stock, which at first went begging at seven and ten cents on the dollar, is now above par.

We know nothing of the merits of the bill now before the Legislature; but that sooner or later the vast growth of New York will demand that a part of the vast stream of freight and passengers shall be made to flow through a subteranean conduit, we have little doubt. Fancy one plunging into the bowels of the earth at the Battery, diving under five miles of brick and mortar, and coming up to the roar and daylight of the outer world at Central Park! And yet some of us will live to see it.—Albany Evening Journal.

A Washington telegram in the Tribune of the 1st, says:

Senator Wilkinson knocked down one of the buttresses of Slavery today with an amendment to the bill organizing the Territory of Montano. He moved to strike out the words "every free white male inhabitant" from the elective franchise clause, and insert "every male citizen of the United State and those who have declared their intention to become such." To a crafty suggestion from a Border State Senator that he had better insert in the bill distinct authority to black men to vote, Mr. Wilkinson replied that he was satisfied with the amendment as offered, and hoped never again to see in an act of the United States Congress the words "White and Black."

From the Army of the Potomac,

The reorganization of the Army of the Potomac is again in progress, and this time under the victorious Grant. The same thing was done by McClellan, Hooker and Mead successively, and although it cannot be said that their labors were failures, since the army was really and substantially improved by each effort, yet the great object of making it effective in accomplishing the suppression of the rebellion in Virginia was never approached. Two generals were deliberately sacrificed by neglecting to reorganize this army before attempting a campaign with it—Burnside and Pope—the one the victor of Roanoke Island and Newbern, the other of New Madrid and Island No. 10. The investigations since made by the committee on the conduct of the War have established the fact that the defeats of Pope and Burnside in Virginia were attributable to the fact of their being improperly supported by some of their corps commanders.

Since the battle of Gettysburg it has been ascertained that personal feuds existed among the generals, and that the army again needed reorganization which has now come under auspices likely to command universal confidence. After the battle of Shiloh the army of the Tennessee was thoroughly reorganized by Halleck and reinforced heavily, and the result was a complete success at Corinth. The same course was pursued by Grant after the battle of Chickamauga and with the same triumphant result at the battle of Chattanooga. We therefore, hail with peculiar pleasure the reorganization of the Army of the Potomac as the key to a new career of victory. The army must be made a unit and act harmoniously under the auspices of its gallant commander.

GEN GRANT.—It is a cheering sign that Gen. Grant refuses to review the Army of the Potomac. Grant is not a holiday soldier, and does not believe in pageants or muster trainings. We believe he never reviewed an army but once, and that was after the battle of Missionary Ridge. The Army of the Potoma has had too many reviews. McClellan spent half his time airing himself on horseback in front of his troops. Grant means work, and believes the Army of the Potomac was sent into Virginia to fight. After he has whipped Lee he may possibly review the troops; but, depend upon it, he will review the rebels first. That's his style of reviewing, and they were very successful at Shiloh, Vicksburgh, Chattanooga, and a score of other fields. He proposes to mass his troops, organize them, and then smash the enemy, and when he gets at it there will be no half-way work. Generalship in Virginia has been a good deal like an old hen who never gets an egg but she has to review it, and cackle over it. Grant's egg will either hatch a handsome victory or get smashed. He has no time to spend on general trainings.—Chicago Tribune

TELEGRAPH NEWS.

PHILADELPHIA, April 12.

The Inquirer has the following dispatch dated Nashville, yesterday:

It is certain at last, that East Tennessee has been abandoned by the rebel troops, and that they have destroyed all the bridges in their hasty evacuation.

Seven of Longstreet's Generals have been court martialed in consequence of the failure of the campaign in East Tennessee.

Gov. Johnson has gone to Knoxville to oppose the seperation of East Tennessee.

Johnston's army is receiving heavy reinforcements. Parts of Beauregards army and raw troops have arrived at Dalton, Ga.

Bishop Polk's army is on the way to Dalton.

Johnston's cavalry are active The bulk of his army is at Tunnell Hill.

MEMPHIS, April 6.

Vicksburg advices of the 3d state that the rebels attacked Roches plantation at 2 o'clock on Friday morning. The plantation is situated seven miles above Snyder's Bluff, on Yazoo river, and one of the largest in the State. It had extensive cotton works, and splendid buildings, all of which were destroyed. Four negroes and one child were burned in the buildings.

The 1st Mississippi cavalry—colored—six hundred strong, quartered near the plantation and maintained a fight with the rebels until 8 o'clock in the morning when they charged and repulsed the enemy numbering 1,500 strong.

Our loss was 16 killed. The rebel loss is unknown but 70 killed and wounded were left in our hands. The plantation had been leased by government and was being extensively worked.

NEW YORK, April 10.

The steamer Morning Star from New Orleans the 2d, has arrived here via Havana 5th. New Orleans papers contain nothing additional of the battle at Cane river.

Other intelligence received via Cairo says the President has recognized Gov. Hahn as the civil Governor of Louisiana, and has conferred on him the powers of military Governor. These powers are doubtless intended to be temporary, and to be withdrawn as soon as the people have adopted a State constitution.

The steamers Admiral and Mississippi arrived at Key West on the 3d reporting heavy weather. The latter lost large numbers of horses.

R. HAYNES'

Portable Brace Fence!

PATENTED APRIL 7, 1863.

WE claim for this Fence greater strength and durability with less expense than any ordinary farm fence. No farmer who studies economy and convenience in the management of his farm will be without it. The First Premium was awarded to Mr. Haynes' Portable Fence, at the late State Fairs in Ohio and Michigan, and at several County Fairs. Read the following extract:

"Among the many things we saw on exhibition at the State Fair was Haynes' Portable Brace-Fence. This fence seems to be a great improvement over most Fences of the kind. It is very strong, and is so braced that wind can have no more effect upon it, if as much, as upon a common rail fence. It is light, yet heavy enough for all farm purposes Its cost is but little, and much labor is saved by using this fence, as it is easily put up, and in after years easily repaired. Every farmer ought to see this remarkable fence. We hope Mr. Haynes will be induced to exhibit it at our County Fair.—Medina (Ohio) Gazette.

Mr H has also invented a mould or bench upon which this fence is made. By using this bench any farmer can make the fence at a rapid rate. Full directions for making the bench and the fence upon it accompany each deed. For farm or township rights address

FORT MONROE, April 9.

Last Sunday night forty rebels landed on the wharf, at Cape lookout, and placed the keeper and his wife under guard. They destroyed all the oil and exploded a keg of powder under each of the towers. The windows being opened, lessened the effect of the explosion, and but seventy feet of the stairway were destroyed, and the lantern severely injured, so much so that it will take several days to repair it.

ST. LOUIS, April 10.

A dispatch from Provost Marshal Fry to Provost Marshal Alexander of this State, says: Lieut. Gen. Grant directs that active measures be immediately taken to get into the field all the recruits of new organizations and old troops.

Missouri troops will rendezvous at Louisville.

Sherman in a dispatch to the Governor of Wisconsin on the same subject, says the War Department has given him control of all veterans now absent and to have them sent to the front immediately on the expiration of furloughs. No excuse will be taken for delay, and commanders of regiments will be held to strict accountability for absence of a single day. The General says now is the time that every soldier should be in his place. Three hundred men in time are better than a thousand too late. All regiments belonging to the armies of the Ohio and Cumberland go to Nashville, and those of the army of the Tennessee to Cairo, where they will receive further orders.

Private dispatches from New York say that a panic prevails in Wall street, gold galloping rapidly toward 200. The cause of the upward movement is unknown in New York, and the question is asked whether the Government has had news, which is not published.

The U. S. dispatch boat, New National came up to-day from Red River having left Alexandria about the 20th, having in tow two barges containing sixteen hundred bales of cotton. U. S. Marshal D. L. Phillips was here to receive it. The cotton is considered a naval prize, and at present prices will bring not far from $400,000.

Forrest is reported trying to slip away with small portions of his force fearing he may be caught in a trap.

Official returns not in the late judicial election, but it is still thought that Hammock, the Union candidate is elected over Mulkey, Copperhead, by five majority.

WASHINGTON —pril 5.

The steamer Alcove arrived here to-day from the Tennessee River, reports Roddy's command doing considerable mischief in the vicinity of Waterloo Alabama. The principal business seems to be that of robbing and conscripting.

For the past week or two, we have had very unfavorable weather for army operations, and to-day and last night the rain poured down in ceaseless torrents. This will render any immediate movement of the army impossible, as the Virginia roads are said to be in a horrible condition.

It may be set down as a fixed fact that any army movements on the 'sacred soil' will be out of the question for some weeks. The rebels are said to be still fortifying the south bank of the Rapidan by digging rifle-pits, constructing abbatis, &c. It is evident that they are making the defenses there as strong as they can, in order to be able to make a stand with as small a force as possible, and thus be able to spare troops for the defense of other threatened points. This line of the Rapidan covers Gordonsville. These places once captured by us, and we hold the line of the Lynchburg and Knoxville Railroad, by which route supplies come to Richmond and the rebel army.

Besides, the possession of these points would enable us to flank the railroads leading up from North Carolina, thereby threatening the entire rebel communications now existing. Perhaps it is with a view of filling up a gap in some other lines of railroad, with the material taken therefrom, that Lee is now said to be tearing up the railroad between Fredricksburg and Hanover Junction. It will be seen, then, that a successful defense of the Rapidan is a very important point with Lee. Once he is driven from there Grant secures the investment of Richmond, so far as the western communications are concerned, and also threatens his communications with the South, thus completing the circle of investment, as much so as that at Vicksburg, when he took it from the land side.

PRIMARY SCHOOL.—We call attention to the card of Mrs. H. Thomas.

THERE will be an entertainment at City Hall one week from to night of which our citizens will be fully apprized in due time.

WE are in the receipt of Peterson's Magazine for May. Its attractive pages are filled with reading matter that will satisfy the most fastidious.

WE acknowledge the receipt of the Continental for April. This monthly is fast gaining with public favor, and ranks as a number one.

PERSONAL.—Capt. Jerome Dane, of the 9th Regiment arrived in town Wednesday morning from St. Paul. He is not in very good health at present.

DISSOLVED.—The firm of Thompson & Barney, of Garden City has been dissolved by mutual consent. Mr. Thompson, we believe continues the business.

Messrs. Prael & DuBoisson have again commenced work on their new brick building the walls of which were laid last fall.

NOTICE.—Subscribers to the daily St. Paul Press, who get their paper of the undersigned, and who are in arrears, will please pay up this week.

C. H. SLOCUM, Agent.

ORDERS.—Sergeant Wesley Maxfield, of Co. E. 9th Regiment, who has been recruiting here for a few months past, has received orders to report at Fort Snelling. He will leave next Monday.

HARPER FOR APRIL.—This number of Harper is the best we have read in a long time. Its leading article is especially interesting. It gives an account of Captain Speke's expedition to the source of the river Nile.

Capt. George A. Clark, of the 4th Regiment has received orders to close his recruiting rendezvous by the 18th inst., and report for duty at Fort Snelling by the 22nd.

PORTABLE BRACE FENCE.—We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. M. B. Haynes, in another column. Most of our readers in this and Fairibault counties are already acquainted with this style of fence and are adopting it.

THE RIVER RISING.—The river is on a bender and has raised nearly two feet within the last week. There must have been heavy rains in the country above us, as we have had none here to speak of. The river is now at a fair navigable stage, and we may look for a boat almost any day. Hurry it up.

We are obliged to defer seveal articles on account of the pressure of a very interesting document that will make its first appearance in our columns next week. It will be carefully perused.

LIFE OF GENERAL MEADE.—We have received from the publishers, a history of the life and services of Major General Meade. It is published in pamphlet form by T. P Peterson, of Philadelphia. We have not read it yet, but, from the glance we have given it, we judge it to be well worth perusal, and should be in the hands of every soldier and lover of his country.

Francis J. MacMamara, chief engineer of the Winona Railroad has returned from his surveying trip in Brown County. He and his party are now engaged in surveying the line of the road running through the ravine back of town. We are not yet acquainted with the result of his observations, but understand that he speaks in favor of it, and that it is perfectly practicable.

EXPRESS LETTER ENVELOPES.—The American Express Co. have added a a new feature to their business—that of carrying important letters by express, thus ensuring a more rapid transmission of business letters. They use the Government stamped envelopes, with the additional prepaid stamp of the Company thereon. The price of these envelopes is ten cents each, which pays in full for carrying and delivering.

METAL TIPPED SHOES.—Shoes are an important item in the expense of clothing children, as every parent will understand. They invariably wear out their shoes at the toe first, and not unfrequently before the other parts are a quarter worn. Children's shoes with Metal tips never wear out at the toe, and it is safe to say that on an average one pair with them will more than out-wear three pairs without them. We believe all the shoe dealers keep them.—Boston Journal

SCOURING AFTER INDIANS.—On Monday last Lieut. Howard of Co. E. 2nd Cavalry, with a squad of fifteen men, was ordered out on the frontier in Jackson county to scour the country in search of Indians that were reported to have been seen along the line of outposts. We are inclined to believe that all this fuss about Indians is gotten up in order to keep the Sixth Regiment from going South. There was a similar scare at the time the Second Cavalry was ordered away, and it amounted to just nothing at all. We can spare the Sixth and Eighth Regiments without any fear of lessening the protection against Indians.

DEATH OF R. J. SIBLEY.—We regret to announce to our readers the death of Rev. R. J. Sibley, of this place. He died at his residence, Wednesday evening last of palsy.

Mr. Sibley was an old resident of Mankato, was well known as a man of strict honesty, integrity, and of firm religious principle. He was very highly respected and beloved by all who knew him. He was appointed Postmaster in 1861 and held the office at the time of his death. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn his loss, one of whom is in the 2nd Regiment, another in England, and the youngest daughter living at home. May the God of Heaven deal kindly with the widow and fatherless in their great affliction.

HORSE TAMING.—Professer Stapleton, a gentleman who has had large experience in governing horses, gave a course of lectures to a large class of pupils on Wednesday and Thursday last. He was highly successful, and every scholar was satisfied that they had received more than their money's worth. In some respects his system of teaching is similar to Rarey's, but the principal points he claims to be entirely different. Several ugly and vicious horses were brought to him to experiment upon, and he soon had them under his control, quiet and gentle as one could wish. Every man that deals in horses ought to take lessons of Prof. Stapleton.

CO. D OF THE NINTH.—A private letter from a friend belonging to Co. D. states that the Company is now quartered at Kansas City, Mo., to which place their friends and relatives can address them. They have good quarters, and the prospect is that they will remain where they now are during the summer. The boys are all well, and look forward to the time when their Uncle will have done with them, and they can return to their homes and friends again.

DISCOVERY OF COAL.—Last Wednesday, Mr. Jonas P. Sawyer of Willow Creek, in this County, presented us with a lump of coal found on the farm of Fredrick Fox. It is the genuine anthracite stone coal, pronounced to be such by competent judges who have examined it, and weighs three pounds and a half. We placed some of it in the fire in order to test it, and found it to be similar to what we used to burn in the East, years ago. The piece in our possession was found on the prairie close to the bank of the Blue Earth river. It was lying on the ground, and exposed to the weather. We understand that Mr. Fox will examine the ground in that vicinity in search of more coal.

There is no doubt in our mind but that large quantities of coal will eventually be found all along on the banks of the Blue Earth. As long ago as 1858 Mr. Robertson, of Faribault County, dug nearly a bushel from the bank of the river on his farm. Nothing was thought of it then but the recent discovery of coal on the Cottonwood, and the pretended discoveries on the bluff opposite St. Peter, have tended to bring this matter before the people again, and now no opportunities will be lost to make thorough examinations.

Sterling Items.

A few words from Sterling will not, I hope, be out of place. We think it right to report progress from time to time, even though, as in the present case, it is not as rapid or as satisfactory as we could desire or had reason to expect.

Five more of our townsmen have volunteered this spring, but their places at the ballot box last Tuesday were more than filled by new comers who have bought land, and, with their families, have settled here.

We did not need to call a party Caucus for our late election, for all here claim to be Union men, and that is all we ask just now.

As one of the signs of the times, it may be remarked that a petition to Congress for the immediate and total abolition of slavery received the signatures of nearly all the voters, including some who a short time ago, were strong pro-slavery men. Thus, we may say with Galileo, but in another sense, "The world does move that's certain."

We voted no town tax last year, and we find that with economy we can pay our way this year also without one. But we voted seven hundred dollars to pay the bounties to our volunteers, and aid their families.

The vote on the bridge question was thirty seven for and seven against building them. And we know now that the majority would have been greater had the subject been understood by all. Very few persons are desirous of crossing our streams,

"As the Ducks do,
They swim over.

Your humble servant tried that plan at the LeSueur in 56 and feels justified in saying that in his opinion a bridge is preferable.

We have the pleasure of reporting that though the State Poll Tax is quite unpopular with us, yet every dollar has been paid over to our energetic Treasurer in due time according to law. We wish we could say as much for another unpopular tax,—that on Dogs; but only thirteen have been registered in this town during the year past; this in part is owing to a belief that other towns that have claimed heavily from the fund have not paid into it. Is that so, Mr. Editor? Could you not publish a statement of the amount received from and paid to each town? It might remove prejudice to some extent.

SIDNEY.

The Post Office Department has denied the application for a semi-weekly mail from Mankato to Madelia. The amount of service is not sufficient to warrant it.

HOSTETTER'S Celebrated Stomach Bitters is one of the greatest strengthening preparations extant. It is especially adapted to those who are afflicted with the Fever and Ague, or any other disease arising from a disordered condition of the digestive organs. For the Fever and Ague there is perhaps no medicine in the world equal to it, as it enters, purifies and replenishes the blood, which is so important to bring about a healthy action in diseases of this nature. The Bitters are now among the most popular, and at the same time, valuable specifics in the medical world. In recommending it to the public, we are fully conscious of doing them a great service, knowing, as we do, their many excellent qualities, and sure and speedy action in all cases where the disease is caused by irregularity of the digestive organs. A trial will suffice for the most skeptical. ☞ See advertisement.

By MRS. SARAH F. WAKEFIELD.

This is not a history of the Indian War, but a narrative of Mrs. Wakefield's sufferings while she was a captive in Little Crow's camp. She was on her way to Fort Ridgely, accompanied by Geo. H. This is the only narrative that has been published by any of the captives. It is for sale by Lewis & Frisbie at the low price of 25 cents.

FINKLE & LYON'S

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do: will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tention, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood: and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Bodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes. Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health, within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless appetent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs: Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of bilious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic: Hostetter's bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

Who can say that they are not frequently followed by those "Direful Diseases"

"Insanity and consumption." Many are aware of the cause of their suffering, but none will confess the records of the insane asylums. Poetry.

GOOD NIGHT.

BY M. M. POMEROY,

Good night! My darling one, Good night!
But ere from thee I part,
Take this one kiss of love—good night!
It tells how dear thou art.
Upturned thy face—so deep thine eye,
Those lips so sweet and warm;
A good night kiss I leave thereon
To guard thee from all harm.
Good night—loved Pet—Good night!

Good night! My angel Heart, Good night!
I've much to say to thee—
But heart to heart—and lip to lip—
I'll bid good night to thee!
A good night kiss, as sentinel
I leave upon thy lips—
But envy him as you know well
His chance for nectar sips:
Good night, loved pet; Good night!

Good night! My darling Queen—Good night!
I'll visit thee in dreams—
When wandering in spirit lands
On banks of silver streams.
I'll bribe the guard left on thy lips
To slyly let me in—
When we love's carnival will hold
In the heart none else can win!
Good night! My Pet—Good night!

MAUD GRAHAM'S COUSIN,

OR

Killing Two Birds With One Stone.

BY MRS. RACHEL RICHELIEU.

[CONCLUDED.]

Me trouves-tu bien ainsi chere cousine? she asked Jack, anxiously.

'Charmant,'—said he clapping his hands, very much like a girl; and look charming she certainly did. The excitement brought a pretty color to her cheeks, and her eyes were brighter for the sound, sweet sleep and her long curls floated from under a jaunty little cap over her close fitting little jacket of green, with its throat and sleeves edged with the purest white. They went down to the hall door where James had bro't the horses and Jack placed his petite cousine in the saddle as easily as any gallant could have done, and as easily sprang into his own.

They wheeled their horses into the avenue, leading from the house, just in time to meet Frank and Miss Sheldon coming from their walk.

Jack bowed and smiled with ineffable ease and grace, and Maud, her face expressing her pleasure of his company, called out: 'Please Frank you and Barbara need not wait breakfast for us, as cousin Jack came for a ride to give us an appetite for ours, and we will take it by ourselves.'

Frank was astounded; first, that she should be up and cognizant of his doings, and secondly that she should be so early riding, as if by agreement with that detestable Jack; it vexed him exceedingly even though he was left with the magnificent Barbara. He was sullen and silent for the rest of the morning.

Jack and Maud had started off for a race, and he was watching them so intently that he did not respond to a question until she had repeated it; she vowed she would be revenged on him for his indifference if she could get a chance to flirt with Maud's cousin.

The fact was, Frank Graham's love for his wife, was a pure and tender passion, that had grown with his growth, and he could no more do without her than he could the eyes in his head, and the thought of losing her love was unbearable agony to him; but his passion for Barbara, as well as all his former flames, was but the inexhaustible love, he had for beautiful women; fleeting and shallow.

Frank lingered about the house until towards noon, to see Maud before he left—for he had business to transact that day, that could not be delayed—but he lingered in vain; they knew of his business, and stayed purposely, until he should be gone. Jack said he would then 'flirt a little with the queenly Barbara, just for a variety.'

'Ah! Jack, you represent the man only too faithfully,' laughed Maud. When they arrived home Miss Sheldon was alone and watching for them.

Jack sprang lightly from his saddle, and lifted little Maud down manfully and tenderly. How Miss Sheldon envied Maud her handsome husband and cousin; 'I am getting towards the 'Old Maids first corner fast,' she soliloquized, 'low be it spoken my good looks are already waning and it takes all my powers to please now where I used to charm without any effort. I must pump my dear friend Maud, to learn if this cousin is rich, or if he is a desirable connection on that point. I am not sure but there is some warmth in this cold heart for him; I like him; he suits me, and I will try my power, at all event if only to show Mr. Frank Graham that the—to him disagreeable young man—has power to win us both, (she had not forgotten her morning neglect) and to show Mistress Maud, that I can steal her husband and lover both. For this girl had no sentiment of honor in her breast, and no pity or gratitude for the hostess, who had extended such pleasant hospitality to her; and she imagined no honor to others. As these thoughts were passing through her mind, the objects of them came gaily and leisurely up the stone steps, and entered the hall, where Maud said, 'now coz, improve your time to-day, with Miss Barbara, while I will be obliged to retire for that distressing headache, again. Jack said he thought he was 'equal, to that young lady's case, inasmuch as she gave my fingers the slightest possible pressure last night at parting, and her eyes expressed the tender light of dawning interest.' They passed into the parlor where Barbara sat, and Maud said, 'O Barbara, we have had such a glorious ride. We have been to 'Merrill's hiding place;' the great highwayman of long ago; O it is the loveliest spot, I believe you have ever seen. Cousin Jack must escort you there some day.' It would give me the greatest pleasure,' said Jack, with the most winning smile, and the day is lovely to-day, and altho' the saddle horses are tired we could go in the carriage if it would be agreeable to you, Miss Sheldon.

Miss Barbara expressed herself 'perfectly delighted,' but asked anxiously, if it would not be too much fatigue for him.

'Not in the least, I am perfectly fresh and shall be only too happy.' responded Jack.

Then as it is agreeable on all sides I will leave you, said Maud, 'for my ride, has brought on this terrible headache, again,' she added, as she left the room.

Little Maud's heart ached, instead of her head; she had never estranged from her husband before since their marriage, and now, as she passed up the broad staircase, her smiling face lengthened, and a sigh fluttered up from her heart. She heartily wished her friend Barbara had been at the 'South Sea Island' before she had ever come to break their dream of happiness; it seemed as though it never come back bright as before.

Very many married ones have experienced these feelings; they are incidental to, and sometimes I think the spice of, married life.

In about half an hour Jack seated Miss Sheldon, in the carriage; and he exerted himself so well to fascinate the brilliant Barbara, that when they arrived there, she declared they could not have come five miles, the time had been so short, and her expressive eyes said it was owing to her interesting company.

If he pleased before he charmed her now: he had so much good taste, and criticized the ladies so knowingly, and was withal so intelligent and entertaining, not to speak of his 'affectionate way' that if she could succeed to please him, (and she never had a doubt before, but her feeling were enlisted here) she would change her maiden singleness at his bidding. She hoped he was rich, but if he was not, what property she had, would establish him in business, and talents like his would get on in the world; her feelings were very much in favor of the handsome fellow. They alighted whe[illegible] the carriage road terminated, a[illegible] walked on to the spot designate[illegible] as 'Merrill's Hiding place.'

This was a small cave, seemingly cut by the hand of man, into an immense, solid rock, but in reality it was fashioned by nature.

The trees, and underbrush, had formerly grown thick and dense, all around it, but the numerous visitors and picnicers, had broken them away from the entrance, somewhat. It was situated at the base of a high mountain, and just on the border of a deep wood, and originally it would have afforded a secure hiding-place, from the fact that any one searching for a fugitive would naturally think, he had taken refuge in the wood, than on the border of it, and therefore the place was but little known, until the finding of the outlaw, Merrill there gave its notoriety.

Barbara expressed her enthusiasm, by a high flown panegyric on the sublimity of the place. Every art she was capable of was employed, to charm her companion; and she thought she had succeeded admirably by his tender, and loverlike manner, and was sure of it, when he entreated her to allow him to call her Barbara, and sighed as she artfully spoke of her return South.

He pressed the little hand that lay on his arm, as he took it in his; he was a daring lover, and therefore when he helped her into the carriage to return, and seated himself, with her hand still in his, she was far from being offended. In fact their ride was pleasanter on their return than when they went, and 'sentiment' flowed freely from the lips of both. Ere they arrived home, he had as good as told her 'it would pain him exceedingly to part with her.'

A good beginning, truly, for one day's work. So thought Barbara, as she went up stairs to rest until dinner at six, after parting with him at the door—he saying he had an engagement at five, but would try and dine with them at six. But strange to say—he did not leave, for Bessie was at hand, to smuggle him in the back way, and Maud found him ten minutes after, in the little room in the third story reclining at full length on the bed, coat and hat on the floor, and his vest off also on a chair. Maud was obliged to stifle a peal of laughter, as he said:

'I am about used up with my efforts this afternoon, but I succeeded beyond my best wishes. I am about getting tired of these regimentals,' smiling and glancing at his clothes on the floor.

'You must rest a little and then fill up a part of my programme. Be carefull to make your toilet, and have our little tableau ready, for the benefit of my good Francis, when he arrives: I expect him soon now,' said Maud.

I am there in ten minutes, and ready for this other bird,' said Jack springing up and bathing his face and hands, and arranging his dress. Then there was a set of false whiskers to be adjusted then, 'Jack' pronounced himself 'ready.'

They softly descended to Maud's boudoir, where Mr. Frank Graham found them a quarter of an hour later, Jack with his arm around Maud's waist, on the sofa. To say Frank was exasperated, does not express it.

'I think, Madam, the place to entertain visitors is below,' he said, and his wrath accumulated so rapidly he could say no more.

'O Frank! it is only cousin Jack, you know, and I invited him up here. I did not feel able to go down, and so I sent word down to some other visitors that I was ill and Jack was kind enough to keep me company here. I was getting lonely before he came, while you was Barbara's escort so much.'

'Barbara be hanged,' was his wrathful reply. 'You could have gone with us Madam.'

I was not able to endure the fatigue of so much pleasure; you know that much less of sleep, occasioned my bad headaches; and now, when you can remember you are talking to a lady I will talk to you—not before.'

Saying this Maud left the room. How beautiful she looked to Frank in her indignation and full dinner dress. Jack picked up his glossy hat and gloves, as though he too were going, but Frank said:

'One word with you sir. I would like to inform you, that hereafter I shall accompany Mrs. Graham in her rides and walks, and your gallantry can be dispensed with. I would have bid you hearty welcome to my house, as a cousin of my wife's, but you have not only partaken of my hospitality but are stealing my wife's affections from me also.'

Jack laid down his hat again, and dropping into a chair, calmly said: 'Mr. Graham, let us look at this fairly, I came to see a very dear cousin. When I arrived I found her alone and in tears. She would not complain of you, and I could not learn the cause of them; but on learning where you was—at the Opera with a young lady—I suspected her trouble was from some such cause. From that time she—as well as myself—have marked the 'love passages, between you and Miss Sheldon. And is it a wonder then, that, neglected by her natural protector she should turn the love that was unappretiated by you to one who was at once a relative and deep sympathizer.' 'Zounds! sir,' he continued, waxing more indignant, as he proceeded, 'if she had not let me console her, I should, ere this, have called you to account for your treatment of my cousin.'

'O Lord! he admits that she loves him,' groaned Frank, covering his face with his hands; that being the thing that struck him most forcibly of what Jack had said.

'No sir, I do not say so,' said Jack, 'but I do say she will learn to, if you do not mend your ways; and it is but just punishment for you, if it is so. Who could turn from such an angel as my cousin is, for a bold, artful coquette, who is so depraved as to appropriate her hostess's husband? Why! man, her baseness, cruelty and coquetry are woven in every fibre of her being. They are her natural inherents. She makes you think—when you are by—that she can think of no one but you, and when you are absent, turns her arts on me. Is she—I say—an object of a man's best feelings? What can we love in our life companion, if she be wanting in the fine, and noble qualities, that make the true woman?

'I never cared for her,' Frank tried to say, though faintly.

'Well, I must say it looked much like it,' said Jack, when she sang of 'withered hopes,'—the early walk when both faces wore the guilty confusion of a 'mind ill at ease,' and many other things, sir, that we could not be blind to.,

'Now, sir,' said Frank, aroused, 'if you have done accusing me I would be obliged to you if you would leave.'

And as Jack took his hat and left the room, he saw Frank sitting with his face buried in his hands, and his elbows resting on the arms of his chair. Jack crossed over to the room where Maud was, and after whispering a moment with her, she passed into her boudoir, where her husband sat. She opened the door and Frank lifting up his head, opened his arms, saying softly:

'Come here, Maud, dear.'

She went and seated herself on his lap.

'O Maud, I thought I was sure of your love,' said he, as he buried his face on her bosom. 'I will leave you and go away, until you long for my presence.'

She put her arms around his neck and said:

'You are sure of my love now, Frank, if you want it, and I have longed for your presence much of late.'

Frank clasped her more tightly, and she continued:

'I have thought of late, that our happiness was all in the past—that you cared for me no more.'

'And I gave you cause to think so, my darling, but it was not so; but if you can forgive me, and love me as before, I will solemnly promise you never to give you such cause again.'

'I shall be only too happy to, Frank, but I cannot endure such a trial again; I would rather go to my father,' said Maud.

'You shall not have cause, dearest; you are worth all the women in the world combined.'

Maud gently disengaged herself from him, and left the room. He was surprised at this, but she returned almost immediately, and with her Sue Meadows, radiant in her dinner dress and jewels. And now, his surprise was slightly augmented. Maud said smilingly:

'Frank, allow me to present to you, once more, my cousin, Susan Jaquetta Meadows; sometimes, the 'Jaquetta' is abreviated to 'Jack.'

Sue smilingly advanced, and held out her hand, with those black eyes of hers, overflowing with mirth.

Frank stood as one dumb, and as his eye fell on the article she carefully held in her hand—her whiskers,—the whole truth flashed upon him, and with a most comical look upon his handsome face, he exclaimed as he threw the proffered hand from him:

'O you graceless mischief plotters! I'll have nothing to do with you. O, that I should ever fall into such company,' and he turned his back to them.

But Maud stole her arm through his and said, laughingly,

'All's well that promises such good in the end as you have promised me. Now do give Sue a cousinly welcome, seeing how kind she has been to me, and you know she has not been treated very well by you, so far.'

'As well as she deserves, and better,' he muttered; but she was at his other side now, and as his eyes fell on her laughing face he suddenly caught her up in his arms, and—although she was quite a large woman—threw her up two feet above his head, and then as suddenly served Maud the same, only she was so much lighter she went up four instead of two feet.

'I'll never forgive you, never,' he cried, with a droll attempt to keep sober, which failed entirely, and he sank into a chair, and had his pent up laugh.

'I'm more inclined to turn you out now, than ever, you witch,' said he at length.

'Well now, my dear coz,' said Sue, as she dropped on a stool at his feet—Maud was already in his lap—'I am going to invite 'Jack' to stay here for just one day more, that he may have his chance to propose to Miss Sheldon.'

'If that is the 'programme,' I'm agreeable,' he said, 'and forgive you too,' and he stooped and stole a kiss, to show that he did, so suddenly that she was not aware of his purpose. She blushed and instantly boxed his ears; then as he and Maud laughed so heartily at her confusion, she 'vowed she would leave to dress for dinner—for Miss Barbara's especial benefit,' and ran out of the room.

At a little before six o'clock, she joined them in the dining-room, again the handsome Jack Meadows. Barbara soon appeared, and during dinner, wondered at the affectionate attention of Frank to his wife, but her thoughts were more on the best way to charm Jack, who was again the—somewhat bold—but most devoted 'lover' of the afternoon.

A sly smile passed occasionly between Maud and Frank, but Sue kept her face tolerably straight, only Miss Sheldon thought 'he' laughed somewhat heartily, at her bon mots, but she took it as a compliment to her wit.

A day or two passed, and Jack was with her continually; riding, walking, and boating by moonlight. On returning from one of these excursions, Miss Sheldon—to draw Jack on'—spoke of returning South.

'Must that time ever come my dear Barbara?' sighed Jack as he pressed her hand warmly. 'O Barbara,' he continued, 'I have an almost princely fortune, but it is 'dross' to me if you will not share it. Can I hope you will make me so exquisitely happy?'

'O Mr. Meadows! this is so sudden, but I cannot help my feelings—my love is yours already'.

'Jack' drew her to him, and put his arm around her waist, and just raised her little hand to his lips, murmuring his hopes of proving 'worthy of her trust.'

They returned to the house, and Barbara ran up stairs in a flutter of excitement. She had secured a rich husband, and one she fancied, also. She was a little surprised to see a note lying on her table. She opened it and read as follows:

MISS BARBARA SHELDON:

"I have this day won from you a promise to be my bride; but now that I have wooed and won you I will let you feel a part of the sufferings you have caused others. Among them my cousin. You could not even spare your friend, and your kind hostess; but in the absence of other material for flirting, did not hesitate to allure away her husband. Believe me he understands you now, and I feel in hopes this lesson will be of benefit to you, if only to prevent you from playing with warm and loving hearts in the future. I thank your good feelings for myself, and am sorry that you are not worthy of a reciprocal feeling on my part. I must now bid you a last farewell, and that you may never trifle again with the feelings of others is the wish of

S. J. MEADOWS.

She sat as one stunned, then, after some moments, with a heavy heart but quick movements packed all her effects with her own hands, and donning her traveling dress, and putting on her bonnet, went softly down stairs. She listened a moment at the parlor door; she had the pleasure of hearing 'Jack' telling Maud of the 'proposal,' mingled with the sound of low laughter. She passed out with bitter feelings, and going to the nearest Hotel dispatched a man for her trunks. That was the first they became aware of her departure. She was not regretted and a merry party gathered around the table that day to dinner. The next two months were very pleasant ones to the trio at the Graham mansion, then Sue's visit terminated, with a promise to visit some watering places with them the ensuing summer. She did so, and had the pleasure of boarding at the same hotel with Miss Barbara Sheldon. That young lady always avoiding her as if she was now aware of her "killing two birds with one stone."

A Gallant Female Soldier—Romantic History.

Doctor Mary E. Walker, who is well known to many of our citizens, writes us from Chattanooga an account of a singular case of female martial spirit and devotion to the flag.

Frances Hook's parents died when she was only three years old, and left her with a brother in Chicago, Illinois. Soon after the war commenced she and her brother, enlisted in the 65th 'Home Guards' Frances assuming the name of Frank Miller.' She served three months and was mustered out without the slightest suspicion of her sex having arisen. She then enlisted in the 90th Illinois and was taken prisoner in a battle near Chattanooga. She attempted to escape and was shot through the calf of one of her limbs, while said limbs were doing their duty in the attempt. The rebels searched her for papers and discovered her sex. The rascals respected her as a woman and gave her a separate room while in prison at Atlanta, Georgia.

During her captivity she received a letter from Jeff. Davis offering her a Lieutenants commission if she enlisted in their army. She had no home and relatives, but she said she preferred to fight as a private soldier for the stars and stripes rather than be honored with a commission from the Rebs. About two weeks ago she was exchanged. The insurgents tried to extort from her a promise that she would go home, and not enter the service again. 'Go home!' she said; 'my only brother was killed at Pittsburg Landing, and I have no home—no friends!'

Dr. Walker describes Frank as of medium hight, with dark hazel eyes dark brown hair, rounded features, and feminine voice and appearance. Dr. W. is well versed in human natures, as well as anatomy, and she believes that justice to the young woman in question requires that she should be commissioned a Lieutenant in the army. The Doctor also argues that Congress should assign women to duty in the army, with compensation, as well as colored men, avering that patriotism has no sex. Whether the President will commission Miss Hook as a lieutenant, or Congress will draft Mrs. Walker's countrywomen into the service we know not, but we are certain that the 'Doctor' is thoroughly in earnest, and that the story of her new portege is an interesting one.—Washington Republican.

Indian Prisoners.

On Monday the party of Sioux Indians spoken of in last week's paper as being on their way down, reached the Sauk River crossing and camped near the bridge, about three miles from this place. In the afternoon, Mr. James B. Mills called at our office with his span of bays, and we did not hesitate long in accepting the proffered seat in his buggy. In a few minutes we came to the camp. There were ten tepees belonging to the Indians, and a number of tents used by the guard. As we approached, a shoal of paposses were scudding about over the ice, and we was pleased to see how close the little dears could ran to the open channel and not fall in. The squaws and some old hags that looked as though they might have sat upon the first hills which were formed, were gathering up hay and straw and carrying wood for the use of their lords. Upon reaching the tepees, another installment of greasy little papooses were squirming and wriggling in a heap in front of the openings. Great lazy Indians stalked about in their dirty blankets and leggins, seeming the very embodiment of filthiness. Some of the younger ones had already located themselves within, and were playing cards at a lively rate. The whole affair was calculated to disgust one more than ever with Indians and everything connected with them.

The party consisted of 21 men, 32 squaws and 38 children—in all 91. They go as prisoners to Fort Snelling, where they will doubtless be fatted up, clothed and set at liberty when in good condition. They all belonged to the bands engaged in the massacres except one a Sisseton. Among the number are two brothers-in law of Little Crow. It is wonderful how well a murderer fares if he is only an Indian!

Joseph Demeraux, the interperter at Fort Abercrombie, who performed such signal service when the Fort was besieged was with the train.

The escort consisted of company G, 8th regiment, Capt George Atkinson, and performed their duty quite creditably—men and officers walking the entire distance, and making a quick trip. In fact this is considered one of the "crack" companies in the State.—St. Cloud Dem.

A droll fellow was asked by an old lady to read the newspaper, and taking it up began as follows:

'Last night yesterday morning about two in the afternoon, before breakfast a hungry boy, about seventy years old, bought a big custard for levy, and threw it through a brick wall nine feet thick, and jumping over it, broke his right ankle off above the left knee, fell into a dry mill pond and was drowned. About forty years after that on the same day an old cat had twenty turkey gobblers; a high wind blew Yankee Doodle on a frying pan and knocked the old Dutch churn down, and killed a sow and two dead pigs at Boston, where a deaf and dumb man was talking French to his Aunt Peter.'

The lady taking a long breath exclaimed 'Do tell!'

A little boy in Cedar Rapids, five years old, asked his mother if God heard his prayer? "Yes my son," she replied, "God always hears our prayers." "Well," said the mischievous urchin, "I think he must be disgusted with mine, for he has heard the same old prayer ever since I could talk."

The death of Mrs. Lucretia Clay, widow of Henry Clay, occurred on the 6th inst., near Lexington, Ky. She was the daughter of Col. Hart, of Lexington, and married Mr. Clay in April, 1799, and lived with him happily for fifty-three years.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1864,
ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Sioux Claims.

From a note received from our worthy representative in Congress, Mr. Windom, a few days since, we were much gratified to learn that ther is a good prospect of the speedy passage through Congress of the bill to indemnify the Sioux sufferers, which he introduced some weeks since, and that, in consequence, he advises all having Sion xclaims not to sell them at a sacrifice.

This intelligence is highly important to this community, many of which have been heavy sufferers through the Sioux outbreak, and at the same time it speaks well for our delegation in Congress, through whose untiring efforts the Secretary of the Interior was induced to report favorably upon the claims at this session.

The Department of the Interior has for the year past been crowded with business, a great deal being thrown upon it which was formerly allotted to the other departments. In consequence, the Secretary, through press of business was disposed to let our Sioux claims take the usual course and act upon them in their turn. he being allowed by law one year in which to make his report upon them, But, by the frequent intercessions and entreaties of Senator Wilkinson, Representative Windom, and that unceasing worker, Col. Cyrus Aldrich, as well as others, who explained fully to the Secretary the necessities of the case, and convinced him of the great amount of hardships and suffering which would ensue if he deferred his report the Secretary yielded, and made a report a short time since in favor of the claims.

When we consider that these claims amount, in the aggregate, to over one million of dollars, it certainly shows that the Secretary reposed great confidence in the representations of Senator Wilkinson, the only member who lived quite near the region of the outbreak, and of Representative Windom and others, as well as in the faithfulness of the Sioux Commissioners, of which Col. Aldrich was the moving spirit, when in his (the Secretary's) report, he advises that the amount allowed by the Sioux Commissioners be appropriated by Congress, confessing at the same time, that he has not had leisure to examine the claims as to their merits at all, but rests his favorable opinion of them on the report of the commissioners, and the representations of others who were cognizant of the facts. We venture to say that no bill of a similar amount was ever reported upon favorably by any Department of the Government without being subject to a more searching investigation.

The bill for the relief of the sufferers has been introduced in the House a printed copy of which we have seen, and will come up in its turn, and will probably pass Congress without serious opposition.

We regret to see such a partizan and malignant spirit on this subject, as was exhibited in last week's Record. An implication and insinuation thrown out by the editor that our delegation in Congress had been indifferent to the sufferings of their constituents in this matter. The editor of that paper very well knew from letters received in town from Washington correspondents, which he has, from time to time seen, that our delegation in both branches of Congress have been hard at work all winter trying to get this matter before them, and that it was with great difficulty they could get the Secretary of the Interior to act promptly in this matter. It is only a few weeks since that the Secretary reported favorable to the claims. A bill for the relief of the sufferers was then introduced in the House by Mr. Windom. Being a money bill it had to originate in the House, and could not in the Senate. So don't curse our worthy Senator for that The bill has to take its regular course; the same as other bills, and cannot be acted upon out of such regular course if objections should be made. Now there certainly would be objection made, if, on a bill proposing to appropriate over a million dollars, there should be efforts made by our delegation to force its passage out of its regular course, and our delegation have sense enough to see it even if the editor of the Record has not.

The People of Minnesota have suffered heavily. Their claims are just, and they should be allowed every dollar, and our delegation are acting right and manly about it in inviting the scrutiny of Congress, if any member or members desire. Any attempt to force these claims through by a sly dodge, or in a hurried manner, would at once excite suspicion in the minds of many of the members that there was a big swindle about to be perpetrated, and would occasion the shelving of the claims for the present session. Any one who is knowing to the fact that the sufferers by the Indian outbreak in Oregon never received any favorable consideration from Congress for some ten years after the losses had been sustained, and that, too, at a time when our government had not a Southern rebellion on its hands, must acknowledge that for the very first Congress to act upon the bill after the Commissioners, appointed to investigate the Sioux Claims. had reported, is not evincing a very dilatory or procrastinating spirit on their part. Nor does it show that our delegation in Congress has been very remiss in this matter as claimed by the Reord.

We do not expect that the Record will ever acknowledge that Senator Wilkinson ever did anything for his constitituents. The editor hooted at his 'grand cart way' to the Missouri, and yet, after it proved a success, he is very eager to have a mail route established over it, and even thinks that it would be a good route for Idaho emigrants. It has never even acknowledged that we are indebted to the Senator for the efforts to secure a change in the Minnesota river terminus of the Winona and St. Peter Railroad in favor of this place. It did not even have the manliness to insert one line, at the time, in defense of the change, when the St. Paul Press, and the St. Peter and other journals were howling against the Senator for doing this section simple justice.

We do not expect, or ask the Record ever to speak justly of Senator Wilkinson on any matter; but justice to the unfortunate sufferers by the Sioux outbreak should deter it from making glaring and malicious misstatements in its columns, which can only have the effect of needlessly exciting the fears of the Sioux sufferers.

Capt. Thornton.

By late letters received from our townsman Capt. J. J. Thornton, we learn that he is with the Red River Expedition, and attached to the staff of General Mower, as Division Quartermaster. He was at the taking of Fort De Russy, and writes that the rebels pitched their hardware around rather promiscously for a short time, and intimates that when the General ordered him to retire to the rear and pack his trains, the order was by no means unacceptable. The Captain was in the enjoyment of excellent health, and likely to continue so, if hard work and plenty of it would tend to produce such a result.

Mr. Kramer and the Commissioner.

The Record having failed to make any case against the Collector of this District, now pitches into the U. S. Commissioner before whom Mr. Kramer was tried, and asserts that this official found him guilty upon the complaint without a particle of testimony, after Mr, Kramer had plead innocent.

Considering that the Commissioner is an appointee of Justice Nelson, this charge is rather hard upon him coming, as it does, from one of the judges' devotees, and as our columns are crowded this week we shall leave the commissioner to make his own defense.

If the Record had stated that the charges against the Collector and Commissioner were not based on any testimony except the loose statements of Mr. Kramer, no attention would be paid to the matter, The advice the editor gives in regard to paying the balance of the judgment is not so valuable as to entitle him to any counsel fee, for if not paid, Mr. Kramer has abundant property for the Marshal to levy upon.

The Record is silent as to how Mr. Kramer gets out of paying his local taxes, and very wisely, too. We have found, upon further examination, that the Kramer's had last year two threshing machines instead of one, two mowing machines, a large lot of stock and some 1,400 bushels of wheat in Mankato, and yet, this "influential and respectable citizen" who exercises a "controlling influence" in that town was the assessor—in fact, has been for several years past.

CHANGE OF LAND GRANT!

Unanimous Report of the Senate Committee in Favor of Mr. Wilkinson's Resolution.

Mankato a Great Railroad Centre!

It will be seen from the following letter from Senator Wilkinson that his joint resolution to change the Railroad land grant has been reported upon unaminously by the Senate committee. This is equivalent to its passage through that body. The intelligence will be received by our citizens and the public generally, with peculiar gratification at this time, and every one will give him all honor and credit for laboring so earnestly to bring about this important result.

WASHINGTON April 12, 1864.

FRIEND SLOCUM.—Dear Sir:—Enclo ed I send you a bill which passed the Senate to-day. It provides for two Railroads running into Mankato, one from the vicinity of Austin in Mower County, and the other from Sioux City in Iowa. This will make our town a great Railroad center, if we can carry out our measures.

To-day the committee reported my resolution unaminously, changing the land grant so as to allow the Winona Railroad to run to Mankato. This will cary it through the Senate.

Very truly your friend,
M. S. WILKINSON.

We publish below that portion of the bill granting lands in the State of Minnesota of which the Senator speaks;

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That there be, and there is hereby granted to the State of Minnesota, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Mankato, in said State, to the southern boundary thereof, so as to connect with, and become a part of the railroad mentioned in the first section of this act, to be located from Cedar Falls to the northern boundary of Iowa, so as to connect with the Minnesota Central R. R. Also from Mankato to the southern boundary of the State of Minnesota so as to connect with, and become a part of, the railroad mentioned in the first section of this act, to be located from Sioux City, in the State of Iowa, to the northern boundary thereof, in the direction of Mankato, every alternate section of public land of the United States, not mineral designated by odd numbers, in like quantity per mile of said railroads, situated in the State of Minnesota, and on conditions and with limitations in every respect the same as those attached to the grant herein made to the State of Iowa, as fully and completely as if the foregoing sections were herein recited in full substituting Minnesota for Iowa where the latter occurs therein.

For the Mankato Union.

Danville and the Whiskey Barrel.

In a former article I gave an exposure of the corrupting influences of the use of whiskey at a town election. We have been carefully watching the effect it would have in the future. Some little good appeared to have been done, of which we were glad. Not long ago a special meeting was called to fix the bounty to be offered to volunteers, at which the following question was put; "Mr. K—— why have you not whiskey here. you'd get more votes?" to which I am told he gave the following reply. "I shant have any more whiskey at elections. Mr. Kellett gives me fits." You will, observe that the meeting was not held as heretofore over the whiskey barrel, but in an uninhabited house. Is not every good man's sympathy stirred up to the highest point for men who face the frosty wind of a March day, with their noses bitten by the cold, who could not then get a little drop to warm the stomach, sharpen the hearing, light the fire in the eye, and oil the hinges of the tongue, to enable them to transact the important business of fixing the town bounty for recruits for our army? A good drink of the cordial, and a heavy swig of cold water after, would have expanded the stomach, and perhaps enlarged the generosity so, that instead of $125 to the patriot volunteers it might have been $200.

The causes which have led men to give up the use of intoxicating liquor have been various. Some have given it up because they had no money to buy it, and no one to buy it for them, others have given it up from a fear of public exposure, as in the present case, To sell liquid fire, and poison men, and then pocket their money, to cheat the government out of its just revenue is all right, if it can only be done in the dark; but when the evil deed is dragged to light, woe to him who exposes it. While we deplore the moral depravity into which our town is sunk in whiskey drinking, we rejoice that the fear of public exposure in a local newspaper has such a beneficial effect in preventing such a debasing practice at an American election.

But we have a reaction. Our town meeting was held in the same uninhabited house as before described. To the no small surprise of maney the jug and glass were deposited, not in the dark cellar, but in the voting room, and to public view. One of the voters says, "Mr. K——, let us hear the report read." To which the reply was given, "I have no report. I was taken prisoner and carried to St. Paul, and so I could not make it out." Mr. Marshall, you busy body, what right had you to enter our quiet little town and lay hands on our chief officer. At least, why not leave him to draw out our town report either in German, French or English as pleased him best, and not leave us in the dark as to how our money was spent last year.*

We live in an age of progress. You who have done business in the old fashioned way, if you had been at our meeting you would have been taught the new and latest fashion Only come and take a little internally of our eye water, such as we give, and if you could not see a hole in a ladder before, you could then see the right man to fill every office in the town. It did not make any matter whether, he was sober or trustworthy, if he could only drink as much rum as would scald a hog, if he answers our purpose, in he goes. "No whiskey here," (says one) "for Republicans, but plenty for Democrats." "Come," says our worthy chairman, after filling up a bumper for his father, who took it down in quick time, "if any one is dry let him drink, then come and vote. Not vote first, then drink, that would be slantindicular; but drink first, then vote, that is upright and down straight. Come friends try the St. Paul whiskey" So to insure us a triumph in a town election we must have St. Paul whiskey. Any man who drank the St Paul nectar and did not vote the true Democratic ticket deserves to be drummed out of the regiment, and have the rouges march played at his heels.

I understand, form good authority, that threats of revenge have been made against me for my exposure of the whiskey barrel at our November election. I am aware that my stables and horses may be burned, and the match put to my dwelling house, or myself shot, from behind some fence. but no threat will deter me from exposing corruption when a sense of duty leads me to do it. I have no quarrel with any man living. It is with principles I have to do, and when I see the ballot box so degraded as it was last voting day I will try to take it out of the mud.

JOHN KELLET

* A report was read about four o'clock, when a principal part of the voters had gone home.

Grant and the Potomac Army.

The copperhead papers are already predicting the failure of Gen. Grant and the breaking out of civil war in the North in consequence thereof. The wish is father to the thought. The N. Y. Herald for example says:

> Greely should beware. If Gen. Grant should fail in the coming campaign, and civil war in the North ensue, Greely will be the first victim that will be sacrificed to the vengeance of an exasperated and out raged people.

If Grant should fail, why should there be civil war in the North? What has Grant's success or failure to do with the peace of the North? Is it the purpose of the Copperheads to begin their long threatened fire-in-the-rear and help the rebels not only to dismember the Union, but to subdue the Free States? Are they plotting for the failure of Grant? It would seem so. If 'Greely will be the first victim that will be sacrificed to the vengeance of exasperated' Copperheads. may not Bennett be the second one? There will be blows to give as well as to receive.

The Herald goes on to say that if Grant fails

> It will invite a Northern civil war. It will perhaps, destroy the public confidence in Grant; and the people thus cast loose from another faith, confusion and anarchy of the worst description must ensue; or, if public orders is still kept; the hopes of the people will once more fall upon General McClellan, and a grand tide of popular enthusiasm will carry that hero to the Presidency.

Ah, now we are getting at the marrow in the bone. Grant's failure is predicted. To make sure of it the McClellanists in the army are instructed how to raise a 'grand tide of popular enthusiasm for young Napoleon,' that 'will carry the hero to the Presidency.' The first thing is to secure Grant's defeat, the next is to get up a civil war in the North; the third step is 'to destroy public confidence in Grant;' the fourth is to produce 'confusion and anarchy of the worst description,' and the last step in the plot is 'to elevate Gen. McClellan to the Presidency on a grand tide of popular enthusiasm.'

Gen. Grant seems to understand perfectly the feelings of the McClellan Copperheads towards him, and to have taken prompt and vigorous measures to defeat their conspiracy. His first step is to re organize the Potomac army and weed out of it all that class of officers who on so many occasions have sacrificed the nations interest to their incurable pro-slavery prejudices and secession sympathies, —preventing victories and causing disaster, His second step is, to send west for thirty or forty thousand of his bronzed warriors who have never known the sensation of defeat, but have won all battles they have fought and captured all fortresses they have be-sieged. Let him mix these up with the eastern soldiers of the Potomac and at once a new spirit will be infused into that army; the eastern soldiers not to be outdone will be spurred up by the spirit of emulation to fight up to the western standard. Third it will secure to Grant a powerful body of devoted companions in arms who have served under him in the West, and shared with him the glories of great deeds of valor. These men will not tolerate the first symptom of McClellanite insubordination or treachery, but will crush it on the spot. The course here named is the very one Gen. Grant is quietly pursuing. He understands the nature of the disease that has afflicted and ruined the Potomac army, and rendered abortive the efforts and sacrifices of its soldiers. McClellanism—that's what is the matter, and the distemper he has set about curing before he moves on the enemy's works.—Chicago Tribune.

The Miscegen Party.

There are in the United States about 700,000 mulattoes—persons whose mothers were of African descent, but whose fathers or grandfathers were white men. It is not probable that of this whole number ten of them are the children of Republican fathers. All the rest of the 700,000 were begotton by 'Democrats' of the Copperhead and Confederate Breeds. Where there is one case of miscegenation between Republicans and 'wenches there are ten thousand between those who call themselves 'Democrats' and negresses. The Republicans want to have the blacks let alone, and the only way to prevent amalgamation with them is to give freedom to them. When once free, the male blacks take care of the female blacks and prevent miscegenation. In a state of slavery they are subject to the absolute will and brutal lusts of their Democratic masters, and a progeny of mulattoes is the consequence. The whole African race in the South is being bleached out by Democratic miscegenation. Emancipation is the sole preventive and this the Democrats North and South, fiercely resist. Why? Because it would put an end to miscegenation! Which is the miscegen party—the Republicans who want to put a stop to the vile practice by leasing the female blacks from the lustful clutches of the masters, or the Democrats who insist on retaining possesion and control of them?

Late from Idaho.

The Grand Rapids Pilot publishes an article from a private letter written from Idaho in the latter part of January by a recent resident of that county. The writer says:

> I came into this mining camp last spring, and worked through the season for six dollars per day. I am now at work on a ditch to fetch water into some mining claims. Myself and two others took a contract last fall to complete this ditch. We have now about half of it completed. I have a mining claim which I intend to work as soon as the season opens, and am in hopes to make a good thing, and return next fall with myself and family. My health never was better, and I feel as if I was filling my pockets with the one thing needful for old age. I think my claim will pay $18 to $25 per day to the band.

Lynch Law in Idaho.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 30.—An Oregon despatch contains late news from Idaho relating principally to the extra measures made there for the suppression of outlawry. The Grand Jury of Boise county had returned twelve indictments for murder, sixteen for assault with intent to kill, and one for manslaughter. A vigilence committee, numbering one thousand men are making a clean sweep of the villains infesting Beaver Head county. They hung eleven men at Virginia, five at Big Pole, one at Deer Lodge, and seven at Briar Roost. The rush of emigration from Oregon and California to Idaho is immense.

Captain Nelson Roberts is still in command, and has with him as first clerk, that genial good fellow, Ed. McLagan. Ed. has been on the Jannette as second clerk for a number of seasons, and understands his "biz."

The Jeannette returned Sunday morning, and will probably be up again to day.

Coal Mines.—Prof Eames has sent forward a detatchment of men to his recently discovered coal mines who are now busy in erecting houses and getting everything ready, preparatory to sinking the shaft for coal. He is still in New Ulm, having been detained there several days on account of an injury to his arm, but is intending to leave for the mines this week. He estimates that it will take some six weeks of hard labor before the coal bed will be reached, and the extent of the bed is a matter of great uncertainty.

Drift Coal.—The discovery of coal on the Cottonwood has caused the people in quite a number of localities on the Minnesota and Blue Earth rivers to imagine that coal beds of considerable extent exist also in their vicinity. They base this opinion on discovering more or less drift coal along the banks of the streams. We published a case last week. Prof Eames, says that in his exploration on the Minnesota he sometimes found as much as two tons of it scattered along in different localities, but he has no faith in the existence of coal beds near the Minnesota or Blue Earth rivers.

New Ulm Matters.—Property in the business part of New Ulm has advanced considerably within the last few months. A corner lot without any improvements, a little above Vaghn Bro's store was sold recently for $500. The seller bought it a few months since for $350.

There would be considerable building this spring if it was not for the want of building material.

The Eagle mill, now under the control of Mr. Behfeldt, is doing a fine business. The demand for the lumber sawed at this mill is much greater than the supply. A shingle machine is also in successful operation in connection with this mill.

The engine recently bought in St. Paul of Mr. Eames is expected soon, and will be used in the old Globe Mills.

They are simple in construction, and easily understood: and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

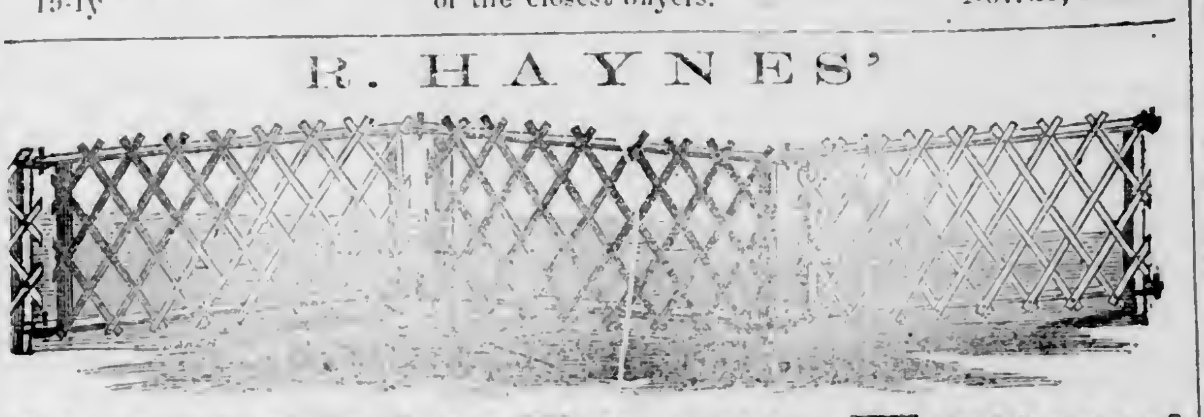
R. HAYNES'



Portable Brace Fence!

PATENTED APRIL 7, 1862.

WE claim for this Fence greater strength and durability with less expense than any ordinary farm fence. No farmer who studies economy and convenience in the management of his farm will be without it. The First Premium was awarded to Mr. Haynes' Portable Fence, at the late State Fairs in Ohio and Michigan, and at several County Fairs. Read the following extract:

"Among the many things we saw on exhibition at the State Fair was Haynes' Portable Brace Fence. This fence seems to be a great improvement over most Fences of the kind It is very strong, and is so braced that wind can have no more effect upon it, if as much, as upon a common rail fence. It is light, yet heavy enough for all farm purposes. Its cost is but little, and much labor is saved by using this fence, as it is easily put up, and in after years easily repaired. Every farmer ought to see this remarkable fence. We hope Mr. Haynes will be induced to exhibit it at our County Fair.—Medina (Ohio) Gazette.

Mr. H. has also invented a mould or bench upon which this fence is made. By using this bench any farmer can make the fence at a rapid rate. Full directions for making the bench and the fence upon it accompany each deed. For farm or township rights address

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Boodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparations contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery exeltant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes. Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health, within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs: Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of billous colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Poetry.

The Robin's Philosophy.

The little robin sings at dawn,
And sings at evening dim;
The earliest and the latest hours
He gladdens with his hymn.

But when the stir of life begins,
The little robin rests,
Or pours a wild and random trill
High on the elm-tree crests.

The more the rain is falling fast
The louder is his note,
And in the fiercest, coldest storm
He pipes with swelling throat.

Oh! robin bold, thou art a sage—
May I be wise like thee,
And meet the raging storms of life
With dauntless heart of glee.

A NEW ENGLAND GIRL "OUT IN THE COLD."

BY M. T. CALDOR.

I think we come at an auspicious moment for exhibiting to you our fair Tennessee maidens though I should prefer a quiet evening. There's certainly a party in the house, Moreton, and tired though you may be with the day's ride in the railway cars, I forsee no end to the dancing before you.'

'Never mind, give me a pretty partner, and I'll promise to shake off speedily the stiffness ensuing from the cramped seats of your railway carriage.'

'No fear of that; you know what I promised. You'll find it no idle boast that our American girls blend the vivacity and grace of the French ladies, with the stateliness and intelligence of your English sisters. They certainly missed my letter, or mother at least would have saved a home reception for me. But it is just as well perhaps.'

The two speakers were bending from the window of a hackney coach, which was bearing them from the the railway depot to the elegant villa just out from the business streets of Knoxville. The house rose up from the fir girdle avenue one glow of sparkling light, and as the driver slackened the speed of the horses while turning into the avenue, the merry strains of music reached them, and drew forth from Walter Walsingham his first observation.

'Drive up quietly,' said Walter to the coachman; and if there's such a thing as getting up to my old room we'll give a little attention to our toilet, Moreton, before surprising my friends with our sudden appearance. I grow more and more certain they have neither received my letter nor seen the arrival of the old frigate at New York.'

'The jollier I should say for you,' answered his companion, the young Englishman, as he gathered up his shawl and portmanteau, preparatory to descending. 'I can't imagine how I should feel on my return from a three years' cruise like yours.

'We sailors are expected to get used to it; but in truth I am not quite as calm as I might be. See how my pulse is beating! Our old surgeon would call it a gallop in good earnest. Ah, it is something to come again, and to know as I do after seeing Frank in New York, that all is well here. But come follow me quietly. Let down the baggage on the steps yonder; coachman! There's your fee. Come, Moreton.'

The two yong men in their travelling cloaks, portmantean in hand, ran up the steps, and passed under the brilliantly lighted portal. A tall negro in a livery of green and white bowed low at first, with a respectful wave of the hand, toward the cloak room; but all of a sudden he dropped his formal manner, started figedgedly at the foremost of the guests, and throwing up his hands, and opening his mouth in a broad grin of delight that showed the whole glittering semi-circle of ivory, ejaculated—

'Massa Walter, true 'nuff! Hi, hi! won't the missis be glad?'

'How are you Jumbo, old fellow So I've stole a march on you all? Where are the ladies?'

'In the drawing-room, and lots of the gentle folkes, Massa Walter. Hi, yah! won't all the folks and all de darkeys be glad to see you? Hi, yah!'

'Never mind that now, Jumbo, We'll hear it all to-morrow. Is any one in my room? can we go up there?

'No, sah; no one ever has that room Missis won't allow it no how.'

'Then we'll go, Moreton. Here you Jumbo keep that grin from telling stories, and say nothing to any one till we come down again.'

The returned son ran up the broad stairway with buoyant steps, and sparkling eyes that took in joyfully every familiar object. A colored woman with a gay turban met him at the upper landing, and echoed Jumbo's joyful greeting.

'Massa Walter! oh how did you come? does the missis know?'

'Not now, Daphne, and you must not tell her. Bring some lights to my room, if it is dark, and some cool lemonade for us before we go down to surprise them.'

With all the glee of a school doy, Walter flew from one well-remembered object to another heaving every few moments a sigh of supreme satisfaction. His friend watched him smilingly, the while he threw aside his dusty travelling attire, and donned the dress suit, which Cuffee, Jumbo's especial ally brought out from the trunk he had toted up stairs, ostensibly from a belief that massa would need something in it and his help sure; but in reality to get a peep at that massa's face; for, however, Jumbo understood that the ladies in the house were to be kept in ignorance, he could not forego an expressive nod and wink to convey the tidings to his fellow servants.'

'Hi yi, Massa Walter looks high,' muttered Cuffee, as he dusted, with reverent fingers, the gold lace to the sleeve and shoulder straps in Walter's naval uniform. 'Won't missis be proud? Hi, and Miss Victoria is here to-night too.'

And at that name a warmer flush deepened the young lieutenant's cheek, though he appeared unheeding.

Moreton who had been as busily occupied in making himself presentable at the drawing-room, turned from the mirror at the name.

'Miss Victoria! that is one of the familiar names, lieutenant. So I shall see her to-night.' And he bent a quizzical glance into his friend's face.

What a warm smile broke over the moustached lips.

'I don't know whether I am glad or sorry. I should prefer to see them all alone away from the crowd, but I am as happy as well can be, to know that I shall soon clasp their hands again. Ah, old fellow, we sailors know how to apreciate our homes and friends, I can assure you.'

'I have no doubt of it. Your radiant looks are contagious; even Cuffee and Jumbo are perfect reflectors of delight. I expect a rare treat in witnessing such a meeting.'

'And you are ready, I see. So I am; how do I look. Cuffee—all right?'

'Couldn't do better, massa. Hi! how ole missis will joice, and young Missee will laugh. Dey specked you was off ou de big ships with de guns. Speck dey'll be proud 'nuff. Massa Walter looks hansum as a picture, don't he, massa? dat ar am a fact any how,' said the privileged Cuffee, glancing from the fine, erect figure in the becoming uniform, to the English guest.

The latter laughed.

'You're pretty correct in your conclusions, Duffee,' said he; adding earnestly: 'I'm certain, Uncle Sam need'nt be ashamed of one of his lieutenants, whatever may be said of the others.'

'Now then we will go.'

Arm in arm, they descended the stairs, followed by the eager glances of Cuffee and Jumbo.

From the archway to which he was led by his friend and host, the young Englishman, Maurice Moreton, saw an elegant suite of rooms well filled with ladies and gentlemen. The tall mirrors multiplied sparkling chandeliers, and fragrant wreaths, stately figures and lovely faces till it seemed to have become an enchanted scene to which the strains of delicious music set a silvery rhythm.

His eye followed the lieutenant's to a tall, stately figure standing before a crimson velvet tete a-tete, with a group of elderly people around her. The glossy folds of black satin, and airy ruffles of finest lace, might have added something to the lady's high-bred, aristocratic appearance; but it is more owing to the expression of the clear-cut, tranquil features, with their involuntary haughtiness tempered with cheerfulness. The Englishman had secretly been inclined to laugh a little at the young naval officer's pride in his mother's old Virginian blood, but now as he gazed himself upon the lady, he could understand, and sympathize with the feeling.

No duchess at St. James had looked more thouroughly noble, securely above the level of the common herd. It was easy to see how such a woman must be loved and reverenced by refined and noble natures, although with the low and base her high-bred grace might not have commanded a single throb of sympathy or respect.

'My own dear mother, how little she knows whose eye is watching her.' murmured the young navy officer

And then his eye swept away in search of other dear ones.

At that moment there was a stir among the dancers.

Walter's uniform was too brilliant to remain unnoticed and would not blend quietly with the dark habiliments of the civilians. The revolving figures suddenly made way and three young ladies came hastily across the long room towards the archway. The young Englishman watched them almost as eagerly as his companion.

Three graces indeed! He had heard the description so often of two of them that there was no difficulty in assigning them their names,

That was surely Victoria Clyne—that magnificent girl with her stately head crowned with broad bands of jetty hair, with that bewildering glorious, oriental eye, and the proudly arched lip of brightest crimson, outvieing the cheek against which swung now and then, as if caressingly, the linked pearls that formed a tassel for the gem encrusted comb that might well need added strength to guard such wealth of tresses.

Maurice Morton had leisure for close observation, and the picture of that group advancing from the brilliant back-ground never left his memory.

Miss Clyne, in her lustrous dress of amber satin was the central, and tallest figure with one white arm clasped around the waist of a slender fairy creature in a misty robe of triple flounces of lace, aerial enough for an Alpine nymph. That sweet, pure brow crowned with its wreaths of lovely blossoms—the calm blue eyes and dainty, childish mouth, had looked up to him many a time from the oval of ivory that Walter was never weary of exhibiting to those of his friends he trusted and respected Marion Walsingham, without a doubt! a sweet, little sylph without a trace of her mother's stateliness or her brother's dignity.

Their unknown companion, who the Englishman was sure had never been described to him, was between Marion and Victoria in height, and it seemed in character, likewise. With none of the latter's queenly magnificence, nor possessing so much beauty as the former, and yet with a calm serene face that grew upon the gazer with a nameless fascination something in the grave, brown eyes, and broad white forehead, and still and reticent lips, betraying a depth of character upon which a close observer might have relied more implicity than on the superficial attractions of her lovely companion.

Marion came bounding forward with sparkling eyes.

'Walter! Walter Walsingham! where did you come from, when did you arrive? oh, how delightful this is?'

The lieutenant drew her beneath the hanging curtains of the arch, and kissed her fondly, and then turned with a flushed cheek and outstretched hand to Miss Clyne.

'My dear Victoria.'

'I am so glad to see you Walter.'

These were the only spoken words but how eloquently the flushing cheek and sparkling eyes atoned for the forced constraint of the welcome.

'And here is Allie Allston—your cousin Allie, Walter. You know we have written all about her;' added Marion.

Walter bent gallantly and respectfully over the fair white hand and then bethought himself of his friend.

'My English friend Mr. Moreton is with me. I wrote you all about it but as I hear from Cuffee the letter has not arrived. Come Maurice let me introduce you to my sister and her friends.'

'And now I must bring mamma,' said Marion gaily, after the introduction was over. 'I don't know as she will ever forgive us for getting the first word of greeting.'

'Come with her to the little sitting room, pet, we will wait there for her.'

And with a happy smile the youthful lieutenant offered his arm to the lovely Victoria, and his friend following his example, escorted Miss Allston from the hall.

The first couple took a tete-atete by the bay-window, and their low breathed conversation did not reach the ears of the others, who smilingly ignored their lack of courtesy.

The entrance of Mrs. Walsingham aroused them however. She came in with a hurried step, and face flushed with expectation.

'Walter, my son, my dear boy.' exclaimed she in a tone that betrayed the idolatry of her love for this only son.

Walter sprang up. Even Victoria could not claim the first place when his mother was near.

'My own precious mother—you see I have come safely back to you.'

'Thank heaven for the mercy!' And with her hand on either shoulder she put him back, and stood looking at him with fond admiring eyes. 'You have grown in these three years—has he not, Victoria?'

'Not out of your rememberance?' he answered, smiling back in the fulness of content and joy. 'I scarcely see any change in you; Marion is a shade less gipsyish, and Victoria, if it is possible, is more lovely than before. But I have brought a guest with me, Mr. Maurice Moreton, whose kindness to me in London will, I am sure, be worthy pastport to your hospitality and esteem.'

Mrs. Walsingham came to the young Englishman's side with extended hand.

'Welcome for your own sake and thrice welcome for that of my son. I trust we shall be able to keep you with us as long as his stay ashore. Have you had refreshments? Walter, you come so unexpectedly it almost seems like dropping from the clouds—has any one tended to your needs?'

'All we require as yet, though I'll promise for one to do justice when your supper hour arrives. And now shall we join the guests—and Victoria will you honor me with your hand for the first dance at home?'

CHAPTER II.

They were happy days that followed although now and then, Walter Walsingham found himself sighing when he perceived how swiftly the golden winged hours were bearing away the days of his month's furlough.

His English friend remained his mother's guest, and had won so warm a place in the regard of all, as to seem, and be treated like one of the family.

Victoria Clyne might also be called a member of the household. Her home was only a mile away; but she was seldom permitted to return to it.

The betrothal, which the blindest could see approaching, was speedily consummated; and as he placed the engagement ring on her finger, the proud and happy Walter led the peerless Victoria to his mother's side for the blessing so certain to be given warmly.

'The choicest blessing of Heaven be upon you both!' said that mother fervently. 'Dear Victoria, I believe you are worthy of him; and I know what a true, and noble husband he will prove, because he is like the father whose death was such an overwhelming calamity to me. There will be another now, my son, to watch and pray for you.'

'What a fine couple!' said Maurice Moreton, smilingly watching them as they paced to and fro on the lawn after the engagement had been announced to the family. Walter's stately head bent down to that of his beautiful fiance. 'They would give a fine type of American beauty to my Europeon friend. They used to say in London he was the handsomest man in the United States, and she is certainly superbly lovely. They are well matched.'

His words were addressed to Allie Allston, who happened to be sitting with her basket of flowers which she was arranging into boquets, on the verandah beside him.

'Yes,' answered she, 'they are indeed well matched in position, and beauty, and—pride!' she added with an arch smile,

'Yes, there is far more of that trait of character exhibited here than I expected to find on this democratic side of the water. You are quite as exclusive and aristocratic on the score of wealth, and birth, as the titled people you profess to condemn.'

She did not smile now. and the milky white lily she had been setting in a framework of vivid crimson, was poised a moment in unconsciously idle fingers.

'Too much so. Here at least your remark is deserved; but not everywhere. You will find a better pride in New England. You know I am a Yankee not long enough transplanted to this ennervating climate to have lost my original characteristics. There is one sort of pride, worthy and healthy that all Americans ought to cherish. A pride in their nationality, their independence, their progress, their never-ceasing advance to higher greatness and goodness. But this other pride—in the family name—the large estates, the numberless bondsmen, tell it not in the hearing of my new cousin that is to be—it makes me tremble and shiver, for it is a superficial, and the outside prosperity hides such a world of wrong and misery!'

'Then I may hint to you what I have scarcely dared to breathe to my own thoughts; that I do not find this Southern Institution any lovelier on close inspection!' said he eagerly.

She sighed deeply.

'Any lovelier? alas! it grows more and more hideous! Do you know amidst our scenes of gayety and festivity, I have carried around a burning shivering heart, even from what I have seen on the plantation of one the kindest and most indulgent mistresses—a terrible fear of some sudden and swift retribution for the great wrongs practiced so openly and unthinkingly. Is it not terrible to think what a fiend like, subtile art it carries about with it, that such noble hearts, and kindly natures, as those of all our friends could see no harm or wrong, that poor Rob, was sold away last week and left the old mother nearly mad with misery at the parting?'

'Dare you talk like this to them?' asked he gazing almost reverently at the kindling earnestness of her face.

'I should not mind Walter and Marion, but my aunt is very sensitive on that point—and Victoria is more than that. Have you never noticed how scornfully she looks down upon my dear New England? I verily believe she rates us far below her father's slaves, even though she is certain they are made but to be bought and sold with other cattle Victoria is a type of the spirited, vehement Southerner, who believes the rest of the world made to contribute to the needs and ease of the opulent planter, who is her model of the christian and gentlemen. Alas, alas! break through the crust, try him by the test of character, and what will be the verdict for most of them?'

'You speak so warmly you almost infect me with your own foreboding fears,' said he more and more interested.

She shuddered,

'You have not been long enough amongst them to hear public affairs discussed freely. You would be shocked at the malignant, unjust, untrue declarations that pass freely from lip to lip. At the bold threats the vile slanders, the open treason discussed in calmness, or at least with deliberation by the foremost people of the State. It is better you should not. I almost loathe myself that I have grown so morbidly distrustful, but sometimes it really seem to me there would be no safety for me or even you, here in this house if we spoke fearlessly the open conviction of our hearts. I know well enough how hard it is for Victoria to treat me cordially after the faintest possible objection to one of her sweeping remarks about the power and supremacy of the South.'

Courtesy in Conversation.

This is nothing more nor less than carrying out the law of charity, the doing as we would be done by. It is to recognize the fact that others have a right to ask as well as ourselves, and also a right to expect us to listen to what they say as attentively and respectfully as we would wish them to listen to us. We should not merely hold our tongues when others speak, but should scrupulously attend to what they say. A person who affects politeness, although he remains silent while another speaks, yet does so with an air that plainly shows he is paying no attention to what is said, and is waiting with impatience for the moment when he can hear himself talk—this sort of listening is a mere pretense put on by the conceited and overbearing when they wish to pass for persons of polite manners; but in reality it is an insult rather than a courtesy to listen in this way. To listen with true courtesy, one should feel and show not only a willingness, but a desire to know what another has to say, should follow attentively all that he says, and should then reply with due consideration for what has been said.—Exehange.

FROM HERE AND THERE.—I was reading the other day that on the sho shores of the Adriatic Sea the wives of the fishermen, whose husbands are a way on the deep, are in the habit at eventide, of going down to the sea shore and singing as female voices only can the first stanza of a beautiful hymn; after they have sung it they listen till they here borne by the wind across the desert sea the second stanza, sung by their gallant husbands as they are tossed by the gale upon the waves; and both happy. Perhaps if we could listen we, too, would hear on this desert world of ours some sound, some whisper borne from afar, to remind us there is a heaven and a home, and when we sing the hymn upon the shores of earth perhaps we shall hear its echo breaking in music upon the sands of time, and cheering the hearts of them that are pilgrims and strangers, and look for a 'city that hath foundation,'

An affecting incident occurred at the New Haven barracks the other day. A woman desired to see her husband, embraced him, began to sob and cry violently. Husband gave her his handkerchief to wipe her eyes after which she curiously manipulted it under her shawl and returned it to him. Husband took it as if it were a brickbat. Officer of guard investigated, and found a bottle of old rye whiskey in the handkerchief.

A Hoosier having taken a looking glass home in his trunk, one of his offspring was curious to know the contents of thebox. The merror was on the top, when the youngster opened it gave one brief look, dropped the lid and, with terror depicted on every feature, exclaimed:—'O, mother, mother, father has brought home a young cub! I seed him—a young bear!'

Henderson the actor was seldom knownto bein a passion. When at Oxford he was one day debating with a fellow-student, who, not keeping his temper, threw a glass of wine in the face of the actor, when Henderson took out his handkerchief, wiped his face, and cooly said: 'That, sir, was a disgression; now for the argument.'

'Didn't you tell me, sir, that you could hold the plow?' said a farmer to a green Irishman whom he had on trial.

'Arah! be aisy now!' said Pat. 'How the duce can I hold it and two horses drawing it from me?' But give it to me in the barn, and be jabers, I'll hould it with any body.

Always too Late.

There is a portion of mankind who are always either naturally or habitually behindhand. The trait of their character is easily discovered in everything that relates to their conduct and pursuits in life. Such a man goes too late to bed, and, as a necessary consequence, gets up too late, in the morning. Being out of bed too late, he is too late at breakfast, and this deranges the affairs of his household all the forenoon. Having been behind at breakfast, he of course is behind at dinner, and lastly at supper. If he makes an appointment, he never gets to the place in season; and if he is to meet a board of directors, or a committee, or any public body whatever, he is always twenty minutes or a half an hour too late; and upon being reminded that he has obliged his associates to wait, and thereby to waste their time, he charges his delay to his watch, which like its owner, is almost invariably at least a quarter of an hour too slow. If he intends to take his departure in a steamboat, you will meet him two streets off as the last bell tolls; and, after running down to the wharf till he is out of breath, he finds the boat hauled off, and if he gets aboard at all it is at the hazard of his life.

In short, such men labor, and toil and drudge on through life, just as uniform and regular in their concerns half an hour too late as punctual people are in season. If such persons could, by some great exertion, redeem that half hour, and set their watches right, they might go on with the same ease they do now, and always be in season.

A MAMMOTH DEED.—We clip the following from the Mining Journal, published at Black Hawk, Colorado Territory:

Another mammoth deed, bearing $1000 in revenue stamps, was received at the County Clerk's office on Saturday. It was the transfer of the Smith & Parmalee Gold Mining Company, New York. The deed is a miracle of mechanical execution. The consideration of the sale is $2,500,000. The stock is divided into 124,000 shares of twenty dollars each, of which Smith & Parmalee retain 50,000. Mr. Ben Smith will be resident agent.

The Parmlee mentioned above has a brother in the firm of Lockwook & Parmalee, Solon, Ohio.

Shares worth a million dollars for a gold mining company are a very desirable kind of 'filthy lucre.'

A few days since, Gen. Rosecrans was dining with his staff at one of our hotels. He unfortunately tasted the Tennessee butter, when he immediately arose and saluted the plate before him, remarking: 'Gentleman, that butter out-ranks me!'

An Irishman dropped a letter into the post office, the other day, with the following memorandum on the corner, for the benefit of all indolent post masters into whose hands it might fall,

'Please hasten the delay of this.'

A Western editor was recently requested to send his paper to a distant patron, provided he would take his pay in 'traid.' At the end a year he found that his new subscriber was a coffin maker.

You may depend upon it that he is a good man whose intimate friends are all good.

Our politicians say it is sweet to die for our country, sweeter yet to live for it, and sweeter yet to live on it.

A paper can publish the appointments after the coming in of a new Administration, but what paper in the world can publish half the disappointments?

A little boy being asked in Sunday School 'What is the chief end of man?' answered 'The end what's got the head on.'

A man sitting on the verandah of a Western inn, hailed one of the 'oldest inhaitants' and inquired the denomination of the church upon the opposite side of the road. The reply was: 'Wall, she was a Hard Shell Baptist naturally but they don't run her now.'

In icetown, a little village of tents, built on the ice at St. Louis during the 'cold spell,' a bar keeper built a fire in his tent and was sitting by it warming himself. when the fire thawed a hole in the ice and the man fell through into the water. Shortly afterwards a customer came in, and not seeing the proprietor he inquired of a raw Irish boy who chanced to be present, who replied:—'Faith, sir, an'he's gone into the cellar.'

A very deaf old lady got into a state of very great excitement during a sermon by Mr. Whitefield. 'You cannot hear the preacher,' said a friend, 'and what then is it that moves you so?' 'Oh, sir!' replied the venerable devotee, 'it is the bobbing of his blessed wig.'

JOHN C. WISE,
Mankato, April 25, 1864 C. H. SLOCUM.

We do not propose to take up time in answer to the Record's article of last week. What we said in our last issue in reference to its course against Senator Wilkinson was in accordance with the facts in the case and we believed we were warranted in so doing. We have no intention or disposition to drag politics into matters of local interest, "in the advocacy and furtherance of which there should be nothing but the most earnest and cordial co-operation of all persons interested in the welfare of our town."

It has heretofore seemed strange to us that any one in this place should be foolish enough to carry on a personal warfare against the person, who, of all others, is in a position to do the most to advance the interests of this town and locality. It may be that the Record has advocated measures that the Senator introduced, but we have failed ever to read a word wherein credit or praise has been given to him.

But we are glad the Editor is "willing to overlook the past," and is ready to co-operate with the Senator in all measures of local interest, and accord to him that praise, and that credit to which he is justly entitled at the hands of his constituents. This is as it should be—as it should have been long ere this. It is not yet too late to labor—and much can be accomplished by the united efforts of those who occupy positions in which they can influence the public mind.

The Record may be assured of our hearty co-operation in all measures to promote our local interests, whether they be advocated by a political friend or opponent.

New Regiments of Artillery Authorized.

Governor Miller has received authority to recruit for new regiments of artillery, but declines to do so, and gives four good reasons therefor. First—Because new recruits are twice or thrice as valuable in old organizations as they are in new. Second—Because it would be impossible to raise a regiment within the period specified, and the recruits would consequently be assigned to the artillery of some other State. Third—Because if such a regiment could be recruited no increase of bounty or other advantages would result to our citizens, except the installment of some forty new officers, which is deemed unnecessary. Fourth—Because Minnesota like her sister States, contains a few towns that will not be induced to strike out boldly for the Union by any appeal save that of the draft, and the period has arrived when the laggard disricts should be required to fill the quota.

We had occasion, in a former article, to censure Gov. Miller for the course he pursued in the appointment of Commissioners to receive Soldiers votes, but we are ready to accord to him all honor and praise whenever he does anything worthy of it. The reasons given above are certainly good, and show that the Governor has a correct knowledge of what is required to make our armies efficient. Let the draft come, the sooner the better.

Additional Grant of Lands to the Minnesota Valley Railroad.

Senator Wilkinson has introduced a bill into Congress giving the Minnesota Valley Railroad four sections of land along the line of their road, in addition to the six they have already, making ten sections in all. The Committee on public Lands are in favor of the bill, and Mr. Wilkinson thinks there is no doubt but what it will pass. Mr. Thompson, of St. Paul, is in Washington, urging the matter through, and says if the bill passes, the company will lay the track over the road this fall, as far as it is graded.

Speech of Senator Wilkinson.

We have received a copy of Mr. Wilkinson's speech delivered in the United States Senate, March 21st, on the question of giving freedom to the mother, wife and children of slave soldiers, and in defence of the policy of the President, and regret that we have no room to publish it. It is an able, effort and we shall endeavor to publish extracts from it in a future issue.

The Sioux Reservation.

The following correspondence, which we received this week from Senator Wilkinson, explains itself, and will be of interest to all:—

WASHINGTON, APRIL 18, 1864.

C. H, SLOCUM.

Dear Sir:—As I am in receipt of numerous letters inquiring about the Sioux Reservation, you would do me a favor by publishing for the information of those interested, the enclosed correspondence in your paper

Yours truly,
M S. WILKINSON.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE April 4th 1864.

SIR:—I have the honor to enclose herewith, in answer to your letter of 31st ult., relating to the settlements on the Sioux Reserve in Minnesota, a copy of a letter addressed to the Hon. Wm. Windom, who had made inquiries of a similar nature to those submitted by you.

Very Respectfully,
Your ob't Serv't
J. M. EDMUNDS,
Hon. M. S. WILKINSON, Commissioner
U. S. Senate.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, April 4th 1864.

SIR:—Your letter of the 20th ult., referred by the commissioner of Indian Affairs, submits two questions propounded by D. G. Shillock, Esq., viz:—

1st When will the Sioux Reservation be open for settlement?

2nd. Will there be any arrangement to secure to the people, who have settled on these claims years ago under a mistaken survey of the same their homesteads?

In reply I have the honor to inform you that the act of 3rd of March 1863 (Stat. Vol 12 page 819) for the removal of Sioux bands of Indians, and for the disposition of their bands in Minnesota, requires certain preliminary proceedings on the part of the Secretary of the Interior, in order to the final disposal of said reserve; which, when completed, will be subject to entry on certain conditions As yet, however, this office must pause until advised of the action of the Secretary in the premises,

As to the rights of parties who have settled before the survey of the Reserve, or under a 'mistaken survey,' though no opinion in advance can be expressed by this office, but where the matter, in actual cases, comes before this office, the same will carefully be examined with a view to such suggestive remedies as the law and facts of the several cases may seem to justify

Very Respectfully,
Your ob't Serv't,
J. M. EDMUNDS,
HON. WM. WINDOM Commissioner,
House of Rep.

Quartermaster Carling, of St. Paul advertises for twenty-five teams for Government service, to accompany Major Brackets Battalion to Sioux City. The train will leave Fort Snelling next Monday and will pass through Mankato and Spirit Lake, It will probably reach this place by Thursday next.

Gen. Butler has written a very spicy letter to a high public functionary of which the concluding paragraph reads as follows: "If the arrangement proposed is carried out it would have the effect of making me a mere recording secretary for the will of Major Gen W. F. Smith, who would be the commander. To this I cannot submit. The office of civil mayor of Old Point Comfort is no sort of service for which I was mustered in. Therefore I most respectfully demand either to be relieved altogether from my position, or to have, under the General-in-Chief, supreme control and direction of any military movements having their base within the limits of my department.

The annual meeting of the Blue Earth County Bible Society was held in City Hall, Sunday evening, April 24th, 1864 The occasion was one of considerable interest, and the hall was crowded to its utmost capacity.

The meeting was opened with singing by the choir, after which a portion of the Scriptures was read, and a prayer offered by Rev. Thomas Day.

Woman never appears to better advantage than on horseback, and several of the young belles have improved the recent fine weather in this romantic and delightful exercise in good style.

A machine in charge of a boy of fifteen, passed our office door yesterday morning, more powerful for tearing up the ground than the combined artillery of the army of the Potomac. It was no new invention, but a common plow hitched to a stout span of horses.

Are the latter individuals of a very distinct nationality from the first named? At any rate the coal produced by their labor may be supposed to be slightly colored; let our share be sent from their quarter of the mines.

To the quiet, unobtrusive mind, there is nothing so hateful and disgusting as the noisy dictation and monthy declamation of one who is living and fattening upon the spoils of too many, and offices created to build up, strengthen and perpetuate the party in power.

The War Department has issued orders for the transfer of any mounted men to Infantry who lose or disable their horses through their own neglect. In accordance with this General Sibley has directed regimental and line officers to report all such to headquarters. Company Officers are strictly prohibited from permitting public horses in their charge from being rode or otherwise used, except for purposes immediately connected with the public service,

THE HISTORY OF HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS.—The most remarkable medicine of the day, and the many cures that have been performed with it in cases of Liver Complaint, Dispepsia, Nervous Debility, and other diseases arising from a disordered stomach or liver, places it at once among the most astonishing discoveries that has taken place in the medical world. The diseases to which bitters are applicable are so universal that there are but few of our friends who may not test their virtues in their own families or circle of acquaintances and prove to their own satisfaction that there is at least one remedy among the many advertised medicines, deserving the public commendation.

It makes the interlocked stitch, which is the best stich known. Any one, even of the most ordinary capacity, can see at a glance, how to use the letter A Family Sewing Machine. Our Family Sewing Machines are finished in chaste and exquisite style

The Folding Case of the Family Machine is a piece of cunning workmanship of the most useful kind. It protects the machine when not in use, and when about to be operated may be opened as a spacious and substantial table to sustain the work.—While some of the Cases, made out of the choicest woods, are finished in the simplest and chastest manner possible, others are adorned and embellished in the most costly and superb manner.

It is absolutely necessary to see the Family Machine in operation, so as to judge of its great capacity and beauty.

It is fast becoming as popular for family sewing as our Manufacturing machines are for manufacturing purposes,

The Branch Offices are well supplied with silk twist, thread, needles, oil, &c. of the very best quality.

CLIFTON HOUSE,

Mankato, Minnesota.

THE proprietor would announce to the traveling public that his house is now completed and furnished throughout in the best style and he is now prepared to accommodate all who may favor him with their patronage. From long experience in the hotel business in eastern cities he flatters himself that he understands the wants of the traveling public and will spare no pains to make the Clifton an agreeable stopping place. All who may be visiting Mankato, either for business or pleasure, especially those from the surrounding counties are invited to call and satisfy themselves. Attached to the premises are stables not exceiled in the State either for capacity or convenience. The proprietor thankful for the very liberal patronage bestowed upon his house, would say to all stopping at the Clifton you will meet the same cordial and welcome reception as heretofore. Farmers sustain the Clifton House and by so doing promote your own interest. A word to the wise is sufficient.

THE POUND.—Now that Uncle Tom the pound master has got his pound completed, we notice that the hogs have disappeared from the streets.

NEW GOODS.—Mrs. Oglesby has received by Express a choice lot of new millinery goods, embracing all the latest spring styles. Give her a call ladies.

SHE has secured the services of Miss E. F. Harvey an accomplished Milliner, who will superintend that department of her business.

JAMES M. THOMPSON, and lady, of Garden City, passed through town Wednesday. As will be seen by a notice elsewhere he has formed copartnership for life. You have our best wishes friend, Thompson.

ACTIVITY IN REAL ESTATE.—Quite a number of sales of real estate have been made during the past week, A good many strangers from Wisconsin, Illinois and Pennsylvania are in town purchasing lots, and looking up farms in the vicinity of town upon which to settle. They say that Mankato is destined to become an important point, and that they are not afraid to make investments here.

Harper's Magazine for May has arrived. This number completes the twenty-eighth volume of this magazine, the circulation of which is said to be growing with greater rapidity than ever before. In the June number will appear the commencement of Dickens' new novel, entitled "Our Mutual Friend."

NO MORE LETTERS BY EXPRESS — The American Express Company announce in Milwaukee papers that the Government has forbidden their carrying letters by Express, and hence they can receive no more of them.

THE BLUE EARTH STAGE ROUTE.—The mail over the road between this place and Blue Earth City is immense, and a daily stage line will soon be required to meet the wants of the traveling public. Mason & Robertson's line has all it can possibly do, and the proprietors are obliged to send out extras in order to facilitate travel. The popularity of this stage line is a matter of remark, as all business entrusted to it is dispatched promptly and correctly.

THOMAS DAY, Pastor.

RIVER NEWS.—The contemplation of river navigation is not a very pleasant theme just at present. The prospects of a rise are dubious. A change of moon, however, is expected to bring plenty of rain, and a good stage of water, in the river. We shall see.

The Albany is said to be on her way up to this place with a heavy load of freight, She will hardly get so far, if indeed, she can get above the Rapids. The Island City. A. S. Lemon, and Ariel, are getting ready for business on this river as soon as there is a good stage of water.

DEATH OF A TRAPPER.—About the first of February last, two trappers named Everett and Stevens, went up on the head waters of the Red Wood—distant about eighty miles from here—for the purpose of trapping. They were very successful, and had secured a large quantity of furs. About three weeks ago Everett was taken sick with a diarroeha, and after lingering along for a week, cared for by Stevens, as best he could, died. Stevens rolled the dead body up in a blanket and left it in the tent and then started for the settlements with what furs he could carry.

He was out of provisions, and was obliged to subsist on artichokes, and whatever else he could pick up on the way, and was so weak that he could not carry his furs, and had to secrete them. He traveled for a number of days without seeing any human being, and almost despaired of ever reaching the settlement. Six miles from Lake Shetek he found a lot of trappers who took him in and cared for him, and then started him on his way to this place where he arrived a week ago last Wednesday. Mr. Stevens has since gone on to Rochester Minn., to inform the friends of Mr. Everett, who live in that vicinity, and in company with them will go back for the body.

THE BODY OF A TRAPPER FOUND.—James K. Wilson scout, at Madelia, informed us last week, that while a squad of soldiers were out scouting on one of the branches of the Watonwan, they found the dead body of a trapper lying on the open prairie. He had been shot. undoubtedly, as nine buckshot were found in his body. He had nothing on but shirt, pants and socks. It was supposed at first that he had been shot by Indians, but as he was known to be in company with another trapper who has since disappeared, there is no doubt but that he was foully dealt with, The body was taken to camp, but there is no clue to its identity.

DIED.

In the town of Mapleton March 25th 1864, Mrs MARY N., wife of JOHN M. MORE, and daughter of H. G. and Sally Bassett.

Mrs. More was taken sick on the 14th and up to the time of her death had but little recollection of any person or circumstance. She embraced religion about five years ago, and has proved a consistant christian, a dutiful child, and an affectionate faithful wife. She took an active part last fall in a revival in the neighborhood where she lived, always letting her light shine in the faithful disharge of her christian duties. Some of her last remarks previtous o her death were—"I would like to live, but I am not afraid to die." "God does all things well, and I am resigned to his will." Her funeral was attended by the largest concourse of people, ever gathered together on such an occasion, since the settlement of the town.

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do: will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood: and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

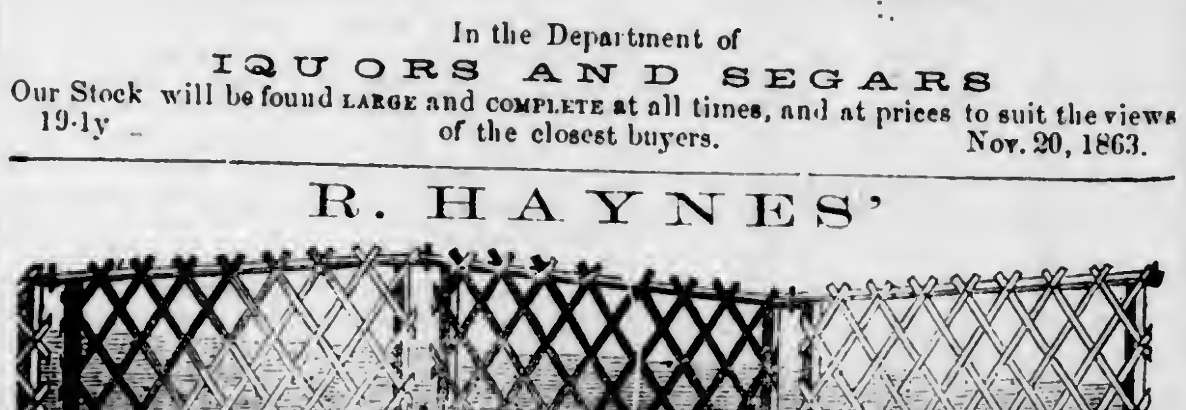
R. HAYNES'



Portable Brace Fence!

PATENTED APRIL 7, 1863.

WE claim for this Fence greater strength and durability with less expense than any ordinary farm fence. No farmer who studies economy and convenience in the management of his farm will be without it. The First Premium was awarded to Mr. Haynes' Portable Fence, at the late State Fairs in Ohio and Michigan, and at several County Fairs. Read the following extract:

"Among the many things we saw on exhibition at the State Fair was Haynes' Portable Brace Fence. This fence seems to be a great improvement over most Fences of the kind It is very strong, and is so braced that wind can have no more effect upon it, if as much, as upon a common rail fence. It is light, yet heavy enough for all farm purposes. Its cost is but little, and much labor is saved by using this fence, as it is easily put up, and in after years easily repaired. Every farmer ought to see this remarkable fence. We hope Mr. Haynes will be induced to exhibit it at our County Fair.—Medina (Ohio) Gazette.

Mr. H. has also invented a mould or bench upon which this fence is made. By using this bench any farmer can make the fence at a rapid rate. Full directions for making the bench and the fence upon it accompany each deed. For farm or township rights address

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation, Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Bodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, Hostetter's Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain, until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of Indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superindnced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs: Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of bilious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

Know Thyself.

On the temple of the sages,
It was traced in words of gold;
And the wise, for many ages,
Learned and taught that motto old.

We have teachers, school and college,
All endowed with talent rare;
But the science of self-knowledge,
Is not known or studied there.

O my masters, learned and gifted,
Here is surely something wrong;
Chide not if the light be lifted,
By a simple child of song.

I have cause to bless the science
That has saved me from despair,
Brought me strength and self reliance,
And a will to do and dare.

A NEW ENGLAND GIRL "OUT IN THE COLD."

BY M. T. CALDOR.

'So exquisitely lovely a creature, surely, though high-spirited and naturally imperious, she must have a generous and tender heart that would keep her right.'

The tears rose into the deep brown eyes.

'You think me unjust, and harsh. So have I called myself a thousand times, and yet I cannot put it away. Even while I see Victoria there, with that perfect face radiant with love and trust turned to Walter's doting gaze, I cannot help seeing poor old Chloe's agonized countenance, and the cold sneer with which Victoria turned away from her wild appeal for mercy. Oh, how thankful I should be to convince myself that it is my own uncharitable, evil seeking heart that is to blame. Understand me, it is not Victoria herself that I am mourning over, it is this blighting shadow of familiar slavery, that has power to make such large, and tender hearts as hers, so pitiless and harsh to this one wretched race. I cannot bear it. Do you know that I came to accept a home with my uncle's widow, which was nobly and tenderly proffered, and that my whole soul so revolts at the scenes I witness that I shall return gladly to New England, to win my bread as a teacher, rather than live here in idleness and luxury? No, no, it is not half so much my sympathy for the poor slaves that distress me, as my grief at the perverted sentiments of these friends I should otherwise fondly love, and warmly admire.'

'How strange it is that such cultivated, and refined people should cling to such a filthy idol. Will nothing move them?'

'It seems not. But God rules in Heaven—if we are impatient, what must it be for his pure eyes? When His Providence speaks, they must listen—nothing else could move them Yes, I a convinced that Victoria, yonder clinging so tenderly to my gallant cousin, would turn away from him in scorn and loathing, if only, all things else unchanged, he came back from the North with an Abolitionist's creed!'

'I suppose you and I may safely claim the abhorred name,' said he smiling.

'I am sure when I came from home I had an idea they were quite as fanatic and mischievous a class of people as the world held, My eyes are opened now, and I must march under their banner if the time comes when all must own their sentiments.'

As she spoke she rose to shake off the loose sprays and leaves from her white apron, and went to the thicket of rosebushes at the end of the verandah.

A wooly head rose up and darted away. It was not Jumbo, nor Cuffee but Jo, one of the most valuable of the family lot, who was most of the time let out as a carpenter.

Alice came back with a paling cheek.

'He must have heard all we said Good Heavens! what will be done if the overseer finds it out?'

'I think your fears have indeed grown morbid if you fancy so trivial a thing could be visited upon the head of a guest.'

She shook her head dismally.

'I sincerely hope no mischief will come of it; but I know just how much latitude is allowed. On all and every other subject, act and say what you choose; but on this, not a whisper more than a jealous code allows. Not even if my aunt and Walter did their best should I, a weak woman, be safe here, did I breathe a word of horror that fills my thoughts, before the people around us.'

This conversation gave the young Englishman an insight. he might never have gained otherwise, into an earnest, thoughtful character, underlying the sweetness and gentleness of the outward demeanor of this quiet little New Englander. He began to study her, and found the occupation fascinating in the extreme A quick sagacious intellect, a warm, tender heart, and a strong conscientiousness, made up a pleasing character, united with a graceful figure, and a face that seemed to unfold magically into that loveliness of the soul, most rare and enduring.

Our young Englishman grew extremely fond of drawing contrasts between the brilliant, imperious Victoria, and this quiet, thoughtful maiden, whose attractions not being showy and superficial needed to be sought diligently, ere they could be enjoyed. It was no disappointment when he discovered how much deeper and more thorough was her information than that of either the other young ladies, notwithstanding their showy accomplishments promised by far the most.

The lieutenant, however, beheld only perfection in the brilliant Victoria, and was overflowing with delight and joy, only troubled at the thought of the approaching parting, when his ship should be ordered on another cruise.

And that thought indeed crept over all minds, as the swiftly passing days brought nearer, and nearer, the expiration of the furlough. Walter had written for an extension, but it had been refused, although accompanied by a half promise of another month's grace when the ship should return from a short cruise to a domestic port. Maurice who was to pursue his tour in the Eastern States, gave his ready promise to return with him, the more readily perhaps, since at his whispered entreaty, Allie Allston had promised to remain with her aunt until that time, and give then the answer to the abrupt and unexpected proposal of marriage that had so startled her on the very last evening of their stay.

'I cannot give you a final answer.' she replied firmly. 'You must try by absence if there is any depth to the affection so suddenly awakened.' adding with an arch smile—'how do you know but you may find among my fair Yankee sisters some one who comes still nearer your ideal than Walter's humble cousin?'

Which suggestion Maurice pronounced preposterous and cruel, and renewed his protestation of undying affection.

'I have none to interfere with my movements or gainsay my wishes.' said he warmly; 'let me carry back to England the gem I have discovered to be such a pearl of price. Let me take a wife away with me when I leave America?'

Allie's cheek was burning brightly, and a happy smile dimpled her pensive lips, yet none the less firmly she repeated.

'Wait until your tour is ended, and you return again with Walter, then if you choose to ask the question again you shall not be denied your answer. Who knows what may happen before that time?'

Who Indeed? how would it have shocked and startled them all to have guessed the half that was to transpire ere they should meet again.

'Well,' said Mrs. Walsingham, that evening laying a hand carelessly on the shoulder of either of the lovers. 'I shall have one anxiety the less. I have always trembled lest Walter should bring to me a New England daughter in lay.'

'And is that so direful a calamity?' asked Maurice, in defiance of a warning glance from Allie, for even he had become sensitively aware of the contemptuous tone so continually used in reference to the Northeners, and for her sake was ready to throw a glance in their defence.

'I acknowledge it would be a great trial.' answered Mrs. Walsingham, smiling fondly upon Victoria.

'But you are all country-women,' presisted he.

Victoria drew up her stately head, and flashed a bright glance of scorn, as she exclaimed impetuously.

'I beg your pardon, Mr. Moreton; you forget you have not paused any on New England soil. Wait till you have observed the people there—their manner and lives—and then you will not blame me for indignantly refuting your last assertion. Indeed we are not at all alike—the inhabitants of two countries could not be more widely different! We look down upon them, as your nobility look down upon the boors who perform their menial services, and they involuntarily bow before us as to their superiors! the mean, pettifogging, miserly Yankees. I can scarcely hear the name patiently.'

The Englishman glanced to the graceful figure in the shade, marked the indignant eye and curling lip, and said gravely.

'I believe I can only claim acquaintance with a single one of the despised race, and if that one is a fitting type of the class, methinks I should be proud to exhibit her as a representative of the whole country.'

Victoria opened wide her magnificent eyes and smiled a little satirically.

'I was not aware you were interested in the amible being, but not even for politeness' sake can I take back my destination. You must have made friends speedily.'

Marion from the tete-a-tete where she sat with her young lover, Herbert Weston, bent forward to whisper,

'Hush, Victoria! He means Allie, and she I am sure is just as sweet, and good as—'

'Allie,' interrupted Victoria catching the name; 'why then I am sure I have still the best list of proofs of my assertion. Don't you know she is Southern in reality? Her mother was Mr. Walsingham's sister—a Southern lady born—and, of course, Allie cannot be a fit representative of the low-minded Yankee, though I won't deny a little taint from being brought up there, is to be purified away by a longer residence with us.'

Allie Allston rose up from the low seat she occupied, and confronted them, and spoke in her clear, steady tones; startling them all.

'Allie is here to speak for herself; and if she cannot fitly represent the New Englander it will be because she is not noble, wise, or intellectual enough. Your good judgment is sadly warped by prejudice, dear Victoria, or you, with all the rest of the refined portion of the world, would respect the worth of the New England character. You judge from the eccentric and ignorant caricatures you have seen. Would you call it fair for me to select your class of poor whites to represent the Southerner?'

Victoria laughed gaily. although the color flushed a little deeper on her cheek.

'An argumentive battle. I scent it afar off. You may as well yield at once, my little Allie, what all the world knows, and what every one here is certain of—that the Yankees are a contemptible, and inferior race. And I, for one, shall be thankful if this election struggle which is making such an excitement should rid us of them entirely We ought always to have kept them under us; but they will understand now, I fancy, what comes of such upstart presumption.'

Walter laughed, but there, was a jarring chord in the tone.'

'Nonsense! don't let's spoil our last evening by discussing such odious subjects as political questions. Victoria does not mean one half she says, dear Moreton. You will find some very sensible and agreeable people there'

'Who will manage to send to the superior race nearer the sun, not only books to read, inventions to use but teachers to give information to embryo nobility,' added Aile.

Maurice joined her slightly exultant laugh, and the sound irritated still more the imperious temper of Victoria.

'Indeed, Walter you are mistaken. I mean even more than I say. Words cannot convey the abhorrance and contempt I feel towards those meddlesome, craven-spirited inhabitants of a country almost as niggardly and parsimonious in soil as they are in spirit. And as for being benefitted by them—if I had the making of the law not one of them should set foot on our soil. I would neither give nor receive from them.'

'Then you would banish me also,' said Allie, with a slightly tremulous voice.

'I thought you was southern in nature and sympathies; if you are otherwise I would most certainly banish you,' answered Victoria coldly.

'What an icy tone! My charming little patriot would almost convince convince me that I might expect the same inexorable decree of banishment if I happened to see anything worthy in Yankee notions,' said Walter, playfully.

A frown was on the polished forehead, and the beautiful lips answered hastily, almost sharply,

'Most certainly you would. You or any one else—the dearest one in the world turned Yankee would be excommunicated at once from my affection and favor.'

Walter winced uneasily, but his mother noticing it hastened to interpose.

'A truce to such a disagreeable topic. There is little danger of our sentiments being summoned to a political court martial. Now let us talk of the festivities to be arranged during Walter's absence, for the gala day of his return. Victoria, I shall leave all the levees to your arrangements.'

Victoria smiled brightly again; and turning her lovely face coquettishly to Walter, dispelled the momentary cloud that had gathered on his forehead.

Maurice bent down to the pale cheek of Allie and whispered,

'It shall not be my fault if this house is troubled very long with the presence of a Yankee maiden;' and was rewarded, and encouraged by the swift look of greatful confidence flashing through their soft brown lashes ere her eyelids fell.

And thereupon the conversation strayed off into gayer topics. and the momentary restraint was forgotten, although often and often afterward to more than one came back every word, burning itself indellibly upon the mind.

With happy hearts, and joyous anticipations of a speedy re-union, the good-bye was spoken cheerfully, and the young men returned to New York No single presentiment of the thrilling events to transpire so speedily, marring the buoyant brightness of their eager hopes.

CHAPTER III.

Recapitulation of the exciting events that followed the election of President Lincoln is needless. The madness of the secession fever ran riot in Southern veins; one after another the slave States followed the frantic move of South Carolina, leaving only Maryland, seized fast by Brother Jonathan's nearly parlyzed hand. And now came the hour when no true man could hold back. His course must be for one or the other. What a momentous question for how many gallant hearts! Walter Walsingham might have followed the example of many many an ungrateful recipient of the nation's bounty. His sympathies were certainly with his much beloved South. But he was fortunate in being with a true-hearted commander. Southern by birth, but keen eyed to see right and justice. He argued the case so lucidly, and convincingly, Walter saw plainly the way of duty and right; and once made aware of that, the young lieu tenant was not the one to shrink from the performance.

Of course the startling events that had transpired put away all chance for another visit home, but he wrote to his mother, and to Victoria, stating gravely and forcibly his conviction, that his loyal services belonged to the Federal Government. How feverishly he waited at his post of danger for the answer. How terrible fell the blow, when in his mother's well-known hand-writing came the words.

'Though it breaks my heart, I disown you! Take another name than cur to trail in shame at the feet of the Yankee tyrants. Henceforward you are dead to us, Victoria bids me say she flung your letter to the winds, and deems it unworthy a word of reply from a Southern woman. All the energies that are left to us after the blow of your apostacy, shall be given to the services of the cause against which you consent to fight.'

Stunned as by a lightning stroke, poor Walter sat with his face bowed over the letter, when Maurice Morton, who hovered in his vicinity anxious to hear a word from Alice, came to speak with him.

Turning his dim eyes piteously upon his friend, poor Walter passed him the letter.

Maurice read it, and stood dumb, unable to think of a word of consolation.

'A man must do his duty, for all his misery! but the first cannon ball that takes me off will perform a welcome deed,' muttered the young lieutenant. 'Did you ever hear the like before, Moreton? A mother casting off her only son, for no fault but fulfilling his vow to the country that has protected and honored him. A betrothed wife setting aside the one she acknowledged as the owner of her heart. Just Heavens! those two women who parted from me so tenderly, with such overflowing love, and sympathy, can it be that they are changing to furies?'

'It is but a proof of the hatefulness of the cause, that it can transform such gentle spirits into pitiless and inexorable enemies. The madness must pass away ere long, cheer up, Walter, they will come to see the right yet. But what is this? you have another letter.'

'I have not opened it—it is from Alice, I judge—read it for me; but my head swims.'

Nothing loath, the Englishman opened the gracefully penned note, and read aloud.

'God bless you, dear Walter, for the noble stand you have taken. So much nobler in you for the pain it must cause you. But I am sure you will never repent it, even though it must greive you sorely to offend your mother and Victoria. I fear they have written something cruel. and I long to comfort you, and soften it for you. If you could be amidst the fierce excitement here, constantly fanned into a more fervent heat, you might extenuate their hard decision, I shall plead warmly for the sacred cause you espouse, and for you; and when they grow cooler, I trust they will see their own error, and respect and admire your decision as I do.

Yours affectionately, ALICE.'

"Poor little Alice! do you remember her dispute with Victoria that last evening?" moaned Walter; 'good Heavens! and is the only word of kindness I get, from that timid,little creature, the acquaintance of so few weeks!'

'Dear Alice!' murmured the Englishman; 'but how is it, Walter, do you repent the course you have taken?'

'How can a man repent his convictions of right? I share their hatred of meddlers; but this is a question of life and death for the nation. No, no, I do not repent; but my heart is crushed out of me.'

He looked like it, with his bloodshot eyes, and pallid features. It was indeed a time to try men's souls. The light heartedness of youth fell away from him forever, and the grave sternness of a warrior's manhood settled in its place.

'Well, there is likely enough to be plenty of work for me. Inactivity would be the keenest torture, I shall welcome active service, and ask to be sent with the fleet fitting out for the Gulf, where I should think must come off a desperate struggle'

'And I am called home to England on urgent business, and cannot be near you to console you what little is possible by the sincerest friendship,' said Maurice, regretfully.

'It is a sorry time for you. Our poor distracted South offers few inducements now for tourists.'

'I shall come back again the moment I can leave this vexatious business, and I shall be sure to hunt you up.'

'If my troubles are not ended by that time. Don't despise me too much for my weakness. A man does not often get such a blow as this, sweeping away home, and friend and everything that makes life desirable—everything but honor. Thank Heaven, that is still left to me. Well Moreton, you'll acquit me of blame that you are cheated of your second visit to Tennessee. And now good bye. I must be off to the commodore's office.

Maurice Moreton perceived that his presence gave keen pain to his unfortunate friend, by recalling the events of the past, and so refrained from forcing himself into his company again. Before leaving for England he wrote a long letter to Alice, again offering to her his hand in marriage, and assuring her of his speedy return, to bear her away from the uncongenial scenes about her. Not a thought of anything beyond annoyance crossed his mind. Had he mistrusted the real danger to which he had left her exposed, nothing could have tempted him away from America until he had seen her insafety.

The letter never reached Alice, for before it was half way to its destination, the mails were interrupted, not to be resumed again until the Federal army had gained its foothold in Eastern Tennessee.

A note which Walter had taken care to send by private hands, arrived safely however; and as he mentioned therein that Moreton had gone to England, poor little Alice said drearily to herself, that he had taken her at her word and having been cured by absence did not feel himself bound even to keep her informed of his change of sentiment.

She carried Walter's letter to her aunt, for it was plain to see the poor fellow had written chiefly because that was the only way to reach his other friends.

Mrs. Walsingham read it through with lips sternly compressed to hold down the cry of anguish that all her fiery Southern zeal could not deaden.

'Say to my mother, and Victoria—dear little Allie, you from whom I have received the only kind word in these sorely trying times—that though they may disown and cast me off, my love for them is too strong and holy to be put aside by any will of mine. And tell them also to spare their shame on my account, When a man deliberately sits down, and weighs calmly and justly all the influences that effect his decision, and then comes to see clearly what must be the course to meet the approval of his conscience, there can be no need of shame on his account. Even if he be wrong in his decision, his motives are pure and deserving of respect. I am not forsaking the South—I am striving to preserve both North and South from ruin. If the Confederate cause should triumph, I believe our glorious country lost. Rather than that, be my happiness, and my poor life also wrecked an hundred times, I shall hope to hear from you of their welfare, since they refuse to communicate with me themselves.'

Mrs. Walsingham did not offer to return the letter and though in her presence she only appeared sternly calm, Alice was certain when she retired to her chamber she had gone to weep over it in anguish of heart.

When Victoria Clyne, as brilliantly lovely as ever, came to call on her friends, Mrs. Walsingham handed her the letter.

She read it over with a curling lip, and then carelessly threw it from her.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

HOW TO WALK.—In a graceful human step the heel is always raised before the foot is lifted from the ground, as if the foot were a part of a wheel rolling forward, and the weight or the body, supported by the muscles of the calf of the leg, rests for the time on the fore part of the foot and toes. There is then a bending of the foot to a certain degree. But when strong wooden shoes are used, or any shoe so stiff that it will not yield, and allow the bending of the foot, the heel is not raised at all until the whole foot rises with it, so that the muscles of the calf are scarcely used, and in consequence, soon dwindle in size and almost disappear Many England farm servants wear heavy, stiff shoes, and in London it is a striking thing to see the drivers of country wagons with fine, robust persons in the upper part, but with legs that are fleshless spindles, producing a gait that is almost awkward and unmanly. The brothers of these men, who are otherwise employed, are not so misshapen. What a pity that, for a trifle saved, fair nature should be thus deformed! An example of this kind is seen in Paris. There, as the streets have few or no side pavements, and the ladies have to walk almost constantly on tiptoe, the great action of the muscles of the calf has given a conformation of the limb and foot to match which the Parisian belles proudly challenge all the world—not aware, probable, that it is a defect in their city to which the peculiarity of their form is part owing.

President Lincoln on the Fort Pillow Massacre.

A great Fair was inaugurated at the Maryland Institute, Baltimore, on the 18th inst. Among the speakers of the opening ceremonies was President Lincoln. The following is a synopsis of this portion of his remarks:

Many supposed the Government did not intend to do its duty in regard to the protection of colored soldiers. All such were mistaken. When the question of employing colored men as soldiers was left to the Government it rested very much with himself whether he should make soldiers of them or not. He pondered the matter carefully, and when he became convinced that it was his duty to so employ them he did not hesitate to do so. He stood before the American people responsible for the act—responsible before the Christian world. He should stand in the eye of the historian responsible for it. He stood before God, and he did not shrink from the decision he had made for he believed he was right, And when the Government determined to make soldiers of the colored people he thought it only just that they should have the same protection as the white soldiers, [applause] and he hesitated not to declare that the Government would so protect them to the utmost of its power. Whenever a clear authenticated case is made out retribution would follow. Hitherto it had been difficult to ascertain to the certainty which should govern a decision in a matter so serious, but in the affair at Fort Pillow it would likely find a clear case. The Government had no directevidence to confirm the reports in existence relative to the massacre, but he himself feared the facts related were true. When the Government does know from official sources, and they substantiate reports retribution will be surely given. [Great applause.]

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.— Women should take abundant exercise in the open air—free, attractive, joyous exercise, such as young girls, when not restrained by false artificial proprieties—are wont to take. If you are in the country, or can get there, ramble over the hills and through the woodlands: botanize, geologize, seek rare, flowers and plants, hunt birds' nests and chase butterflies. Be a romp, even though you may be no longer a little girl.

If you are a wife and a mother, so much the better. Romp with your children. Attend also to your bodily positions, in standing, sitting, lying, and walking: and employ such general or special gymnastics as your case may require. Live, while in-doors, in well ventilated rooms; take sufficient wholesome and nourishing food at regular hours, and keep the mind active and cheerful; in short, obey all the laws of health. Take a lesson from the English girl as described in the following extract:

'The English girl spends more than half of her waking hours in physical amusement that tends to develop and invigorate, and ripen the bodily powers. She rides, walks, drives, swings, jumps the rope, throws the ball, hurls the quoit, draws the bow, keeps up the shuttle-cock, and, all this without having it forever impressed upon her mind that she is thereby wasting her time. She does this every day, until it becomes a habit which she follows up through life.

'Her frame, as a necessary consequence, is larger, her muscular system developed, her nervous system in subordination to the physical, her strength more enduring, and the whole tone of her mind more healthy. She may not know as much at the age of seventeen as does the American girl; as a general thing she does not; but the growth of her intellect has been stimulated by no hot-house culture, and though maturity comes later, it will last proportionally longer.'

Children who do not like castoroil can have it prepared in the recent Paris fashion: The quantity of the oil prescribed is placed in a pipkin over a fire, and an egg broken into it and stirred up. When cooked, a little salt, or sugar, or currant jelly should be added. The patient cannot possibly detect the medicine, and will most likely cry for some of the mixture.

EVERY time a man visits a „free concert" cellar in Broadway, he plunges into the depths of a-basement—and no mistake!

Mankato, Friday, May 6, 1864.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1864,
ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Additional Grant of Lands to the Minnesota Valley Railroad.

Representative Windom informs us by letter that the bill granting four additional sections of land per mile to the Valley Railroad passed the House April 26th. We believe it has already passed the Senate. Mr. Windom says the Company assure him that they will go on with the work speadily, and complete the road to Belle Plaine this fall. There will now be a strife between the Winona and Valley roads to see which will reach Mankato first. Thus is accomplished another of the measures, the completion of all of which, are to place Mankato first on the list of important towns in the State.

Sword Presentation.

About two weeks ago several of our sitizens purchased and presented to Col, Tourtelottle, of the 4th Regiment, a beautiful and costly sword. The following is the corespondence that passed between the parties:

MANKATO, April 18, 1864.

TOURTELOTTE:—Dear Sir:—Your friends and fellow-citizens of Mankato herewith present you a sword, as a token of their appreciation of your bravery and patriotism Your services at the battles of Iuka, Corinth, Raymond, Jackson, Champion Hills, Big Black, Vicksburg, Mission Ridge, and others, in the present war, to preserve our Union and Government, have prompted this act.

Accept it with assurances of our esteem and confidence.

Respectfully Yours,

HEADQUARTERS 4th MINN INFANTRY,
ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA,
April 21st, 1864.

Messrs. Franklin H. Waite, John C, Wise, and other friends in Mankato:

Dear Sirs:—I have this day received from yourselves a very beautiful sword and belt, together with a note of presentation: For the valuable present, and also for the kind expression in the accompaning note, I thank you.

Whatever the rank or pay of a soldier, a large part of his compensation is the glory of the service, and the praise which he always hopes to receive. For myself, next to my own self respect and an earnest desire for the speedy and successful termination of this bad war, I place the approbation of my friends, and first of all, of my friends at home; and coming from them, as this does, it will be to me more than an equivalent for the hardships and inconveniences of active service.

I shall bear this sword far away from the peaceful scenes of domestic life, to scenes of confusion and of strife: but I trust soon—this war being happily ended—to bring it back, soiled perhaps from exposure, and dinted by the usage of war, but ever to me valuable, as it will be to me a memento that my friends believe I had tried to do my duty.

Allow me again most heartily to thank you for this compliment, and also in the name of my regiment, I wish to express thanks, for if I know my regiment correctly, they will feel little less keenly the compliment paid their commanding officer, than if paid them in person; and this of their right, since I believe it is owing to the good conduct of the regiment that I am deemed worthy of this courtesy.

Very respectfully, Your Obt Servant,
J. E. TOURTELLOTTE.
Lt. Col, Commanding.

Grant of Lands for Railroads in Minnesota and Iowa.

The Winona Republican in speaking on this subject has the following;—

Some two weeks since a bill passed the Senate of the United States making a liberal donation of lands to Minnesota and Iowa, to aid in the construction of various lines of railroads therein. One of these roads has its starting point at McGregor, Iowa, whence it runs northwestwardly to the boundary between the States of Iowa and Minnesota, in the valley of the Cedar. There it intersects with a line projected to run from the vicinity of Austin, Mower county, through the counties of Mower, Freeborn, Waseca, Faribault and Blue Earth, to Mankato. Another of the roads alluded to is an extennation of the Minnesota Valley road from Mankato, in a southwesterly direction, to Sioux City, Iowa, forming a connection at that point with the great Pacific railroad, to build which Congress has liberally donated both land and money. A grant having in view the construction of a railroad from Mankato to Sioux City was made in 1857, but as the limitation will expire in about two and a half years, and before the road can be fairly commenced, the present bill is virtually an extension of time for performing the object contemplated by the former grant. And still another is the Mississippi and Superior Railroad, running from St. Paul or some other point on the Mississippi to Lake Superior. The bill making the grants has since passed the House, and it now only awaits the approval of the executive to become a law.

We also learn, in connection with the foregoing, that the Senate Committee on Public Lands has reported favorably on the joint resolution introduced by Mr. Wilkinson changing the land grant of 1857—so as to allow the Winona and St. Peter, Railroad Company to run their road either to Mankato or St. Peter, as they may find it to their interest to do. The original grant makes St. Peter a point on that road, but thro' the exertions of Senator Wilkinson and the friends of Mankato the change contemplated by the joint resolution to which we have referred will probably be made.

The proposed concentration of these three important lines of railroad at Mankato, should it prove successful, must have a powerful influence in building up there a town of considerable magnitude. Mankato is favored by nature with an admirable location for carrying on an extensive trade with the fine agricultural region south and west of it and these artificial channels of commerce will, when put in operation, add greatly to the natural advantages of the place, and consequently to its progress in population and wealth,

The N. Y. Herald is the greatest joker as well as libeller in the United States. It had an editorial the other day censuring the indulgence in personalities of its brethren of the quill, a thing in which it claimed never to engage! It called on its cotemporaries to quit abusing each other, and to copy the example it set before them of dignity and decorum!

A Lecture for Young Men.

Just published, a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure (without medicine) of SPERMATORRHŒA, or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, IMPOTENCY, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc.; also CONSUMPTION, EPILEPSY, and FITS, induced by self-indulgence or sexual extravagence.

☞Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cts.

The celebrated author in this admirable essay clearly demonstrates, from a thirty years successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife—pointing out a mode of cure, at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately, and radically.

☞This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Sent, under seal, in a plain envelope, to any address, post-paid on the receipt of six cents, or two postage stamps. Address the publishers,

A SINGLE BOX OF BRANDRETH'S PILLS.—contains more vegetable extractive matter than twenty boxes of any pills in the world besides; fifty-five hundred physicians use them in their practice to the exclusion of other purgatives. The first letter of their value is yet scarcely appreciated. When they are better known sudden death and continued sickness will be of the past. Let those who know them speak right out in their favor. It is a duty which will save life.

Our race are subject to a redundancy of vitiated bile at this season, and it is as dangerous as it is prevalent; but Brandreth's Pills afford an invaluable and efficient protection. By their occasional use we prevent the collection of those impurities, which, when in sufficient quantities, cause so much danger to the body's health. They soon cure liver complaint, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, pain in the head, heartburn, pain in the breast-bone, sudden faintness and costiveness. Sold by Wickersham, & Kilgore, Mankato Minn. and by all respectable dealers in medicines. 42

CLIFTON HOUSE,

Mankato, Minnesota,

THE proprietor would announce to the traveling publicthat his house is now completed and furnished throughout in the best style and he is now prepared to accommodate all who may favor him with their patronage. From long experience in the hotel business in eastern cities he flatters himself that he understands the wants of the traveling public and will spare no pains to make the Clifton an agreeable stopping place. All who may be visiting Mankato, either for business or pleasure, especially those from the surrounding counties are invited to call and satisfy themselves. Attached to the premises are stables not excelled in the State either for capacity or convenience. The proprietor thankful for the very liberal patronage bestowed upon his house, would say to all stopping at the Clifton you will meet the same cordial and welcome reception as heretofore. Farmers sustain the Clifton House and by so doing promote your own interest. A word to the wise is sufficient.

A copious shower of rain visited this place yesterday, and the prospects are good for more of it.

J. A. Vervais, 1st Asst. Surgeon, 2d Cavalry, stationed at this place, is stopping at the Clifton. He is a very agreeable and social gentleman.

Back Again.—D. H. Tyner, and family are back again, after a winter's sojourn in Ingyanna. Daniel is looking first rate, and has nearly recovered from the effects of his accident of last fall.

Problem.—A man having a forty pound weight, by accident broke it into four pieces, with which he could weigh any number of pounds from one to forty. What was the weight of each piece?

County School Superintendent.—The Board of Commissoners, at its session this week, appointed David Wilcox, Judge of Probate, Superintendent of Schools for this County, with a salary of $200 per annum.

The County Board did a good thing in raising the salary of Auditor Chapman from ten to twelve hundred dollars per annum. Mr. Chapman is decidedly the best person for that position the county ever had, and he should be well paid for his valuable services.

Dion Swift, of Wizard Oil notoriety, and a member of Co K, 10th regiment, has been ordered to his regiment. He has been employed as Clerk in Capt. McKusick's office for a long time, and has proved a very competent clerk.

Mrs Potts has returned from Chicago, where she purchased a large lot of choice millinery goods, of all the latest styles. She will receive her goods by Express in a day or two, and then, of course, her rooms will be crowded with ladies, who can't live without a "love of a bonnet."

Pelican Shot.—Philander Webster, of this place, while out hunting near Crystal Lake last Monday, shot a pelican that measured eight feet from the tip of each wing. Its bill was thirteen inches long. J. C. Haupt bought the bird for one dollar, and intends preparing it for his show rooms.

Our merchants, generally, have received some of their goods. Piael & DuBuisson, Ward, Bradley Bro., and Christensen & Bros, have each received a portion of their spring stock. The advance in dry goods is not so great as was anticipated, but groceries are away on the top shelf, and nothing but large figured greenbacks can get them off.

What a Rush.—There has been a perfect jam of customers all this week at White & Marks Store. This rush is easily accounted for, as they have just received the largest stock of spring and summer goods ever brought to this market, and the ladies have found out that they are selling calicos at twenty-five and twenty-seven cents per yard. They have dry goods, clothing, Yankee Notions, boots and shoes, Hats, shakers, and Wall paper "till you can't rest," and they sell more goods for a dollar than you can carry of on a hay rack.

The Life, Speeches, Proclamations, Acts and Services of President Lincoln, is the title of a new and popular work just issued by T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia. It contains a full history of his Life, his career as a Lawyer and Politician, his Services in Congress, with his Speeches, Messages, Proclamations, Acts and Services, as President of the United States up to the present time, with his Portrait. One large volume, price fifty cents. Copies will be sent post paid to any address on receipt of price. Price to canvassers, $3,50 a dozen, or $25 a hundred, sent on receipt of the money per first express.

Scarcity of Hay.—There is a great scarcity of hay all over the state. Prices have gone up from four to twenty, and even as high as forty dollars per ton. But very few of the farmers between Mankato and Blue Earth City but what are out of hay, and have been obliged to feed their stock oat and wheat straw, and some have not even that to feed. We were up there last week, and learned that farmers are losing their stock for the want of hay to feed them, and we were told that one man had six cows starved to death. We saw the carcasses of some on the prairie. This will teach farmers one lesson, and that is, to provide plenty of hay, and not sell it off, even for a good price, at the expense of losing their own stock.

The Free Homestead.—We have omitted to notice that the "Whig of 76" published at Winnebago, had donned a new head—The Free Homestead.—a very appropriate name, by the way, and a tip-top good paper. We passed through Winnebago last week, and noticing Holley's latch string hanging out, dropped in to see him. He was out; but taking a seat in his chair editorial, we had a very pleasant chat with the publisher, J. L. Christie, Esq., who is one of the "craft," and a very pleasant gentleman withal. Mr. Christie is doing a very fair business and has a good subscription list, which is increasing. We afterwards found Holley in his garden busily at work setting out cedar trees, and evergreens. He will consider that he owes us one, and more so.

For The Sanitary Fair.—The ladies connected with the Soldiers Aid Society of this place, are working very assiduously in procuring articles to be forwarded to the St. Louis Sanitary Fair. They wish to fill one or more boxes with useful articles that can be used for the relief of the sick and wounded soldiers of the West. The object is a noble one, and the efforts of the society should be seconded by all. They earnestly solicit from those who have at heart the comfort and welfare of the brave soldiers in the western armies, such donations as they may have at their command. There should be no delay: but go to work, friends, and help the Aid Society to carry out their enterprise. Donations may be left with Mrs. Hilton, Mrs. F. T. Waite, or at this office.

The Lady's Friend for May.—We would call particular attention to the beauty of the steel engravings in this number of the Lady's Friend. "The Lovers," engraved expressly for this number, is both in design and execution, one of the most beautiful engravings that has ever appeared in a magazine. The Fashion Plate—which is of double size, and handsomely colored—is also a charming specimen of its kind. Of the other engravings, we need only say that they are as numerous, varied, and interesting as usual.

Among the reading matter we note the following articles.—"Deacon Denison's Daughter," "Mrs. Jerry Jane's Fine Original Story," "Mabel's Mission," "The Lovers," by Jean Ingelow, "Dick's Infatuation," "Norah's Ghost," 'After Ten Years,' by Virginia F. Townsend, &c. &c. Every one who does not take the Lady's Friend regularly, should at least send on twenty cents, and have this May number forwarded to them.

Published by Deacon & Peterson, 319 Walnut St. Philadelphia. $2,00 a year.

Our readers will observe that in the official report of the proceedings of our County Board at their recent session, which we copied from the books, that although several important measures were acted upon, yet in the records there is an entire absence of information as to the sentiments of the different members on these measures. The people have a right to know whether their servants—the County Board—are deserving of censure or praise for their official conduct, and if so, to how many it is due. The only way for them to post themselves in these matters, is either to attend in person the session of the Board, or else have their published proceedings contain some information, so that the people can know definitely, by reading the yeas and nays just how each member voted on every important subject. By this course our County Board would feel a little more responsibility resting upon them, and would not act as negatively when matters of importance come before them.

The undersigned, will receive proposals, at this office until the 15th day of May, for building and furnishing a fire proof safe for Auditor and Register of Deeds according to plans and specifications in the Auditors Office, the cost not to exceed $400.

FINKLE & LYON'S

SEWING MACHINES.

These Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do; will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood: and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are peculiar facts, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

Please call and examine, or send for Circular.

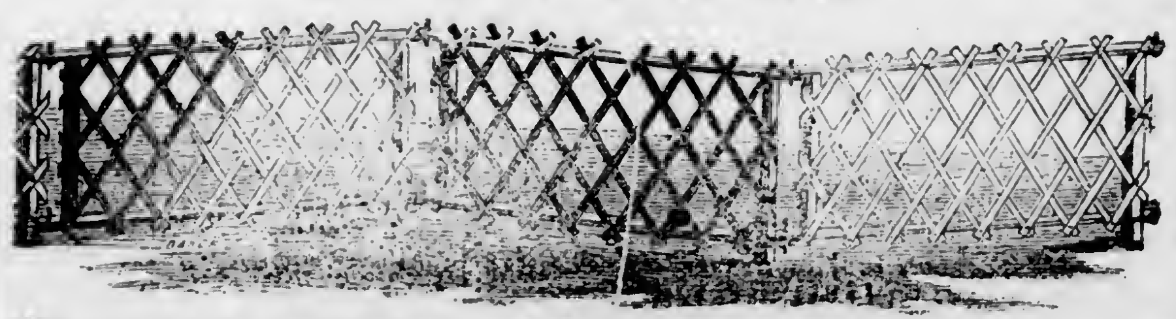
R. HAYNES'



Portable Brace Fence!

PATENTED APRIL 7, 1863.

WE claim for this Fence greater strength and durability with less expense than any ordinary farm fence. No farmer who studies economy and convenience in the management of his farm will be without it. The First Premium was awarded to Mr. Haynes' Portable Fence, at the late State Fairs in Ohio and Michigan, and at several County Fairs. Read the following extract:

"Among the many things we saw on exhibition at the State Fair was Haynes' Portable Brace Fence. This fence seems to be a great improvement over most Fences of the kind It is very strong, and is so braced that wind can have no more effect upon it, if as much, as upon a common rail fence. It is light, yet heavy enough for all farm purposes. Its cost is but little, and much labor is saved by using this fence, as it is easily put up, and in after years easily repaired. Every farmer ought to see this remarkable fence. We hope Mr. Haynes will be induced to exhibit it at our County Fair.—Medina (Ohio) Gazette.

Mr. H. has also invented a mould or bench upon which this fence is made. By using this bench any farmer can make the fence at a rapid rate. Full directions for making the bench and the fence upon it accompany each deed. For farm or township rights address

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Boodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health, within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs. Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of billious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

Poetry.

Prayer of Love.

BY CHERRY BLOSSOM.

O, Lord, our sovereign,
 List to my prayer,
E'er with my loved one dwell,
 Shield her from care;
Let blissful pleasure reign
 Within her breast,
And in my love may she
 Be ever blest.

Let no dark grief e'er set
 Its seal upon her brow,
But ever let her skies
 Be bright as now;
And through the maze of life
 E'er guide her by love's ray,
And make her precious life
 One joyous day.

DEAD.

A sorrowful woman said to me,
 "Come in and look at our child!"
I saw an angel at shut of day,
 And it never spoke—it smiled.

I think of it in the city's streets—
 I dream of it when I rest:
The violent eyes, the waxen hands,
 And the one white rose on the breast.

From Gleason's Literary Companion.

A NEW ENGLAND GIRL "OUT IN THE COLD."

BY M. T. CALDOR.

'I hope you have not been leading the forlorn hope of his repentance, and ultimate return to his allegiance to the South. I have never dreamed of it. I knew him too well. He is too deeply tinged with puritanical notions. It comes from mixing with any but your own caste!' and Victoria flung an irate glance toward Alice. 'I came to tell you a piece of news, my dear Mrs Walsingham. You know Col. Fitz Hugh, who is recruiting his regiment in the neighborhood. A true Virginian, and a zealous Southerner, and such a splendid soldier. He came home from Mexico loaded with honors, for all his youth, I have promised to marry him, and the colonel says the wedding shall take place at once after the great victory he is so confident is coming, the moment our army gets fairly organized. I know you will be glad with me; for as I told Mr. Eastman, of the Vigilance Committee, you were as bitter an enemy to Walter as I myself, and as thoroughly loyal to the Confederate Government.'

Mrs. Walsingham did not contradict her, but sat with dumb, white lips, staring blankly at the smiling, beautiful creature before her.

'You see they are inclined to respect your family; but, of course, you know it is right to keep a strict watch. We want no Yankee sympathizers amongst us!' and again that swift glance of scorn swept over Alice's drooping figure.

'I am a Virginian!' said Mrs. Walsingham at length, seeing that some reply was expected. 'I shall hope that might be proof enough of my faith and loyalty.'

'Yes, I told them so. You may believe I argued warmly on your side; and rest assured I am still your friend. It is hard for you about the estate, but that is Walter's sin, and can't be helped.'

'The estate!' faltered Mrs. Walsingham.

'What! haven't you heard? It is among those confiscated to the government. Walter's of course, I mean. I believe papa is one of the commissioners to decide about the division of the land,. and the negroes.'

A little, short gasp, a quiver of the lips sternly conquered, and that was all.

'Poor Walter!' exclaimed the warm hearted Marion.

Victoria frowned.

'Take care, Marion! if you have sympathy for him even I cannot save you from the consequences.'

'The consequences!' repeated Marion, indignantly. 'Have we got to such tyranny as this, that a word of sympathy cannot be spoken for an only brother, however erring?'

'He does not deserve a particle of sympathy from any one. I think I could see him perish before my eyes, and refuse him even a cup of cold water.' cried Victoria passionately.

Walter's mother shuddered, and Marion drooped her head, but Alice looked up calmly as she said.

'Your spirit is that of the government you admire, Victoria. I leave it to your better judgment if it is a worthy or christian one—such a one as deserves the blessing of Heaven?

'I do not wish to argue with you. I remember your treasonable talk of old: and I have but one warning to give you, Miss Alice, and that is to return to Yankeedom as soon as possible. The Vigilance committee have their eye upon you, and will watch every movement you make.

'Does the confederate government war with feeble women?' asked Alice, her eye kindling; 'methinks the task before it is herculean enough to tax all its energies and absorb evey thought without distracting its attention by insignificant objects. And as for my cousin Walter, I think his heart has received too deep a pang from other sources to be capable of grieving over this paltry loss of his estate. If I was rightly, informed the vessel he commands has just taken a magnificent prize and hewill be likely to make up for this pecuniary deficiency, a hundred fold, I should say, ere this struggle is ended.'

With a countenance, how unlovely, despite its perfect features, furiously angry, Victoria swept from the room,

'Victoria, Walter's Victoria engaged to Col. Fitz Hugh,' murmured Mrs. Walsingham, like one in a dream; and she passed her slender white hands across her forehead.

Poor woman! this had been the darling hope of her maternal life; and just as it promised happy fulfilment it was shattered forever.

'She never loved him truly,' said the indignant Alice. 'She does not know the sacred meaning of the word, far less can her selfish heart feel the ennobling emotion.'

'Oh, mamma, how terrible it will be to have them menddling with our property, and taking away our poor slaves,' said Marion.

Mrs. Walsingham sighed drearily.

'They would have gone any way, Marion—this tax they have levied upon us, will make close economy necessary.'

'And as for me,' said Alice, 'I must be making my way back to New England. I see plainly I ought to have gone before.'

'What do you mean, Alice?' demanded both Marion and her mother.

'I mean that this is no longer the right place for me—that I must go back to old life of independence.'

'Child, do not think we have fallen so low we shall miss the little required for your support. I offered you a home: and I shall give it to you while there is a roof over my head!' said Mrs. Walsingham vehemently.

'Nay, dear aunt, I do not doubt your willingness, or your generosity; but indeed it is better I should go. You heard what Victoria said—that I was an object of suspicion and close surveillance. It may grow to be something worse than annoyance, it may make serious trouble for you, as well as myself. And you know I have too much of the Walsingham spirit to deny my true sentiments.'

The deep red slowly surged over Mrs. Walsinghdm's hitherto pallid chek.

'Do you take us for a race of barbarians that you think they will make war upon a helpless creature like you? Don't you know the boast of our Southern chivalry—that the rights of a guest are sacred and inviolable?'

Alice shook her head.

'I have watched the public movements narrowly. I had better go, dear aunt, ere the fierceness of martial ardor becomes brutal violence and lawless rage.'

'You are prejudice against the confederate cause—you imagine preposterous circumstances. I insist upon your remaining to prove the injustice of your dislike,' said Mrs. Walsingham testily.

Yet still Alice presisted,

'I shall be sorry to displease you; I'm not ungreatful for your kindness, I assure you; if I could be of any service, or comfort to you it would be different; but as it is I must really go!'

'Oh, Allie,' began Marion, piteously; but her mother swept her aside, and with a revival of the old Virginian imperiousness, declared—

'You will stay where you are, Alice Allston. If I did not receive aid and comfort from your presence I should not ask for it: It is because you can be of service! do you understand? Walter will write to you, and you will answer his letters, and I shall know what becomes of him. As for your safety, do you think any one will dare to menace it while under my protection?'

Hapless mother—thrice wretched Virginian! how little she dreamed the fiendish persecutions of which her boasted chivalry were capable, and were yet to exhibit before her horrified eyes!

'Then it is to gratify you that I remain,' sighed brave little Alice, while her heart sickened at the prospect.

CHAPTER IV,

The rolling months dragged on wearily with the once happy and prosperous family, and every day brought some new hardship, and anxiety. Mrs. Walsingham could not fail to perceive that she was an object of close espionage, owing to the fact of her son's fidelity to the Federal Government; and while her proud spirit rose indignantly in defiance, her honorable soul sickened with horror at the unprincipled, villanous measures sanctioned by the Confederates, while every day affairs seemed verging more and more towards a Reign of Terror.

She had yielded one thing after another to the ravenous demands of the authorities. Slaves, land, plate, and at length all her avilaable money.

'We shall starve yet,' she muttered bitterly one day as their careful hoarded grain was carelessly swept into the government cart. The words were scarcely cold on her lips ere the officer of that district appeared with a suave smile on his lips, which however barely concealed the covert sneer.

'My dear madam, I have come on an errand which would be rather delicate if we did not know your sincere devotion to the cause would make the sacrifice a grateful one. The needs of the government are very pressing, and several devoted, patriotic ladies have set the example, and volunteered their jewels. Such a course alike wins the grateful admiration of the country as well as saves from the suspicion of disloyalty. I look for you to set a generous example, since every one knows how richly the Walsingham gems have shone at many a festive scene.'

Mrs. Walsingham made not a word of answer, but rising from her chair, walked straight to her jewel casket, and emptied the contents into his hands.

He turned over the beautiful ornaments as if enumerating a mental list, and then said with politeness more cutting than the keenest irony.

'I beg your pardon—there was a set of diamonds Col. Fitz Hugh offered a generous price for. You probably thought they were here.'

'They are kept in a case by themselves, and were the gift of my dead husband. I have not the right to dispose of them—they belong to my daughter now,' replied Mrs. Walsingham in a suffocated voice.

'Then the young lady will have the pleasure of presenting them,' was the cold reply.

'I think I will keep them to purchase food We seem likely enough to be shortly in danger of starving,' exclaimed Marion barely concealing her indignation.

The confederate agent smiled grimly, bowed, and withdrew.

Mrs. Walsingham dropped her blanched face into her hands.

'And this is the prosperous, benignant government we are promised,' continued Marion, sorrowfully; 'we have but two poor decrepid slaves left us, and they would speedily enough be taken if strong enough to be of value.'

'Heaven only knows what we shall feed them with, or how keep ourselves from starving!' Mrs, Walsingham added in the same dismal tone.

'My dear aunt,' said Alice, who had been a silent, but indignant witness of all that had transpired—.before reduced to extremities, leave I beg of you this forlorn hope of better times, and let us find our way some how, on foot, if no other method is possible, to the New England States. You will be safe then, whatever your sentiments, from persecution, and violence. I will toil so gladly for you, and we can hear from Walter. I need not assure you how gladly he will aid in your support. Oh, dear aunt be persuaded before it is too late.'

The tears were slowly streaming over Mrs. Walsingham's face, but the proud Virginian heart still recoiled in horror from such a fate.

'Steal away from my home! forsake the South, in her extremity, to find a comfortable home among her oppressors?' repeated she.

Even Alice's gentle spirit was aroused to anger.

'Will nothing show you the truth?' cried she passionately. 'Who has brought this extremity to pass? whose madness and folly, and wicked ambition to rule all, and compel a free people to become oppressors of the weak and hapless African has precipitated the whole country into this wretched war. Did you really believe the Northern heart so feeble and pusillanimous that it would see the noble fabric the father bought at the price of so many years striving and bloodshed, wrecked and splintered? Believe me, Fort Donaldson is but the commencement of confederate disasters. Do I not know the strong will and steady perseverance of my Northern brethren. Is the course you see pursued around you by your confederate agents that of the righteous, and just, and beneficent government under which you have lived so happily these many years back?'

'But it is the time of war now, Alice,' feebly remonstrated Mrs. Walsingham, 'We cannot expect anything but privation.'

'How much suffering do you imagine is experienced through the exactions of the Federal Government?' demanded Alice.

Mrs. Walsingham sighed.

'My dear aunt,' continued Alice with trembling lips, 'I have tried to conceal from you the additional horrors, but I see that it is best you should know the whole enormity of this atrocious.rebellion. You know Mrs. Grey who lived at that pretty villa, out on the pleasant road we used to take so often last summer. She was shot down in cold blood, and her daughter shamefully treated, for breathing a desperate wish that the war had never begun. I can count you a score of noble-hearted, honorable men butchered like dogs, because they acknowledged their belief in the Northerners' success, Nay, there is your poor old Jumbo—I grieve to pain you, but it seems to me you will never be convinced without—the poor old man was plied with the most fiendish torture until he fainted from exhaustion, because they could not make him tell them if you were in communication with your son, or not.'

Mrs. Walsingham sprang to her feet, with marbly white cheeks, and horrified, dilated eyes.

'It cannot be true—oh, Alice it is too horrible to be true.'

'Would to Heaven it were not! No one knows whose turn will come next. I know full well that my name is among the foremost of their intended victims,' and Alice burst into tears.

'Oh mamma, mamma, let us go while we have the diamonds to furnish means. It was Victoria who told of them, and if she has set her heart upon them. Col. Fitz Hugh will find means to get it for her, you may be certain. You know how proud she was when you told her they should be her wedding gift. I think they must have been Walter's chief attraction,' said Marion weeping also.

Mrs. Walsingham paced to and fro, lost in a painful reverie, and so profoundly miserable, and humiliated, Alice forgot her momentary vexation.

They waited half an hour—the two girls—while the once haughty women wrestled with herself ere she could force her mind to what seemed such a bitter alternative.

But the silence was broken by a hasty step from without, and a woolly head thrust into the open doorway,

'Miss Alice, please marm come quick!'

'Why, Jo, is it you? Where did you come from?'

'From my gubinent place, and to save you, honey, don't stop de single minute, chile, but get a shawl and come quick.'

Alice turned pale—Marion clasped her hands, and Mrs, Walsingham turned to him demanded peremptorily.

'What are you after here, Jo? You ran away once, and I thought you were with the enemy by this time.'

Jo dropped his eyes and began scraping a bow from the old force of habit.

'Nebber run away from you, missis—when I found out that I was sold to gubberment, I concluded it time for dis chile to look out for himself, Miss Alice told me I was sold, and I guessed right smart what she meant for me to do. Pears like if I 'long to anybody it's Massa Walter, and I'm gwine to save myself for him anyhow; but I can't stop now, I want Alice to come with me, I can save her if she don't stop me.'

'Save her! from what?'

'They're gwine to tote her off to de prison dis yer night. I heard them say it; and pears like once there it would be hard times for her.'

'Take Alice to prison!'

How the queenly form towered in haughty scorn.

'Do you think they will dare to do such a thing from my house?'

'Dunno, missis—dey killed poor Missis Grey widout a word, and heaps of em are in de prison, and dat ere is nigh enuff like death. Dey were gwine to take your diamonds, sure when they toted off Miss Alice—the Yankee schoolmarm, dey called her.'

'I will go with you, Jo. Thank you for thinking of me at your own peril,' said Alice calmly, 'wait only a moment, Jo,' and she disappeared.

'Get de warmest blanket dere is, chile, ye'll need it bad enuff.'

Mrs. Walsingham wrung her hands.

'Could we go too, Jo?' asked Marion eagerly,

Jo started at her in blank amazement.

'Dunno missis, spect I might manage it, right off now: but it's dreadful onrisky work, I was gwine to make tracks for de mountains—heaps of folks hidin' dar. Pears like Miss Alice was the worstest off; but Jo's ready to do de best he can for de whole."

'Oh, mother!' cried out Marion shaking with terror and grief.

Mrs. Walsingham fairly gasped for breath. It seemed scarcely her voice when at last she spoke,

'You shall have your wish, Marion. Heaven knows what may be before us; but it scarcely seems it can be worse than what we shall leave behind.'

'Tell us what we shall do Jo?' began Marion eagerly; and it was something of a picture to see these two refined, and hitherto haughty ladies, clinging to their whilom slave for guidance and support.

Jo was scratching his head, and trying to convince his honest heart that taking this additional encumbrance would not entirely ruin his own hope of escape with Alice, who had seemed to him like an angel direct from the skies ever since he had heard her conversation with Maurice Moreton on the terrace.

He had been willing to come back into danger even when on the threshold of safety, for the sake of the noble New England girl, who had performed so many kind acts to his fellow servants, and who had pity and compassion for the hapless African. But the thoughts of any other company had not occurred to him; and now it was presented. It struck him with dismay, though generous heart that he had, he would not allow them to see his repugnance to the idea. Here was chivalry, though not such as the confederates boasted of.

Spec I'd best get Miss Alice off, and den I'll tell you where to find me dis yer night. I'se been working for em, and pears like they don't spec me. I'se to drive a cart off arter de sheep mid heaps ob oders, and I gwine to hide Miss Alice under de buffaloes: de plan's all laid; dere's twice de dozen ob us, and we have got de pistils, and we mean get away to de woods if we die for't. I get Big Sam to take you in de cart wid him—dat' de worstest ob it; if we can only get out de way ob dese folks dat knows us, to de woods, it's all right. We's to start afore light. and we's to pass dat ere lonesome place on de road out to Missis Victoria's country house. You know, missis, de horses allers shy dere—by de broken off tree. If you'd contrive de getting dar. I d fix de rest. I ll give de three whistles, and you must come right out and jump in afore de guard in front spies you,'

This was a wonderfully long speech for Jo, and he jerked it out with a painful sense of the contrast between now and olden times.

'We understand, Jo,' said Marion. 'They won t suspect us of trying to get away, and no doubt we can get there easily enough. If we can sell some diamonds we have, between now and then, we will have some money to provide for our future progress, and sometime we shall hope to pay you for your goodness, and if we don t, Walter will.'

Mrs. Walsingham clasped her hand at the mention of her son's name but said nothing.

Alice returned and was made happy by Marion's assurance that they were to accompany her.

'Put something in de pocket, Miss Alice, and you two missis, must hab something, and de warm clothes, none ob de fine ones. And now, Miss Alice, you'll be gwine along, and I shall keep in de sight ob ye; but pears like we won t look like we knew one annudder. When I se want yer to stop I ll whistle like as I m singing de tune. Secesh tune, cause nuffin else do nowdays. Good bye, missis; keep up de stout heart, pears like I ll get yer safe to Massa Walter'

Safe to Massa Walter! Oh, what a long way off it seemed! and how the hearts of the three delicate women sank as they remember the weary distance, miles and miles of hostile country, lying between. And yet to remain the more terrible. Even Mrs. Walsingham relized it now.

As Alice, followed by the noble-hearted Jo, disappeared from their sight, mother and daughter fell upon each other's neck with a burst of grief.

'Oh, mamma, mamma, that we should live to see such troublous times.'

'My daughter, that I should be brought to see folly and wickedness of my own pride, that ever I should be compelled to fly from the home of my idolatrous affection, that I should weep and blush for my hapless. misguided, benighted South.'

What intense anguish was betrayed in the hollow tones.

'Then you are convinced that Alice and Walter are right?' asked Marion, in a whisper as if she dared not trust the words to the empty walls.

'I am convinced,' groaned her mother.

But in a moment she raised her head with something of the old dignity.

'I have but one hope—to get to my son—and on my knees beseech his forgiveness for my unnatural conduct. And if we would succeed, there is no time to be lost. We must sell whatever we can, and buy bread. That is all we will carry except our shawls.'

Shall you offer the diamonds?'

'It will be best; if they are coming for them to-night. Supposing you go to Col. Fitz Hugh yourself, Marion, and take what he will give.'

'It will be in confederate money,' said Marion doubtfully.

That will buy bread for a little time, and otherwise we gain nothing from them,'

'I wonder if I could not hide them? if we escape you know they will be a little fortune to us,' continued Marion, loath to part with the gems.

''Possibly! Perhaps the best way will be for you to take them to Col. Fitz Hugh for his inspection; and we can say they are there, when the confederate agents comes.'

Marion went at once to the colonel's headquarters, and was fortunate enough to find him there, and not particularly engaged.

He treated her with a greatly deal of politeness, indeed almost too much to make his demeanor appear easy and self-possessed, and seemed a little disconcerted at her errand.

She quietly opened the little casket, and displayed the sparkling diamonds.

'I understand you desired to purchase them; and as in these times bread is of more worth than such ornaments to those who have none to provide for their wants both my mother and myself feel anxious to have them sold at once. Of course I do not expect you to give me half of their real value.'

She saw his eyes sparkle, and craftily flung out a richer bait.

'Indeed we shall thankfully accept one fourth of what the gem alone would bring in London; as you are aware the govenrment will insist upon confiscating such superfluous articles,'

He tried to conceal his exultation at thus cheaply gaining the ornaments his fair betrothed coveted, and which were safe investment for treble the sum he meant to give.

'If we can agree about the price, I will certainly relieve you of them,' and he named the paltry sum.

'I suppose we can do no better,' said she with a tremulous sigh, though her heart leaped exultingly. 'Then if you will please give me a certificate to show to the authorities that you have purchased them; they cannot accuse us of secreted them; and you may come for them any time tomorrow, with the money. Rather sad work for us—this petty bargaining—but you see how times have changed with us.'

'They will improve ere long; wait till we gain one rousing victory, then you will see how the Yankees will cry out for peace,' answered the colonel gaily. 'Yes I will give you the paper. I can see no harm in it, Victoria will be delighted with the diamonds.'

'You are fortunate in these pressing times to be able to purchase instead of being compelled to sell,' answered Marion. I wanted to call and congratulate Victoria, but really your soldiers are very troublesome.'

'How is that, my dear Miss Walsingham—are the fellows insolent to ladies like you?'

'Oh, not exaclty; but they seem to think no one ought to be abroad without one of those magical slips of paper with your signature.'

'A pass, why you shall have one too!'

'Thank you, oh, thank you! one for my mother and myself; then we can go out a little without so much annoyance. It is so stupid in the house all these fine days.'

The colonel drew pen and paper toward him, and dashed off the two invaluable documents.

Marion grasped them, with tears of relief ready to overflow her eyes. Her first stratagem promised such successful issue who should she despair of the rest?'

'Good morning, Miss Walsingham. I shall certainly come for the casket to-marrow.'

'You shall find the casket, but nothing else,' was Marion's inward reply.

'FIRE AT THE CRISIS!'—During one of the battles on the Mississippi, between General Grant's forces and General Pillow's rebels, the latter officer called out to a Captain Duncan, in his usual pompous, solemn manner:

'Captain Duncan, fire!—the crisis has come.'

Duncan, without saying a word, turned to his men, who were standing by their guns already shotted and primed and simply cried out 'Fire!'

The men were slightly surprised at the order, there being no particular object within range, when an old grayheaded Irish Sergeant stepped up with.

'Plaze yer honor, what shall we fire at?'

'Fire at the crisis,' said Duncan 'Didn't you hear the general say it had come?'

CAN A MAN MARRY HIMSELF.—The Bishop of Carlisle is credited with a joke. It is said that a young clergyman, not far from Penrith, being on the eve of marriage, and not wishing to trouble any of his brethern, wrote to the bishop. inquiring, as he had already published the banns from his own pulpit, could he marry himself? His lordship made no long appeal to laws ecclesiastical, but at once capped the query with another. 'Could you bury yourself!'

A New Yorker, famous for his connections in the sugar, candy and syrup trade, has great passion for boots. In one room of his house he keeps within a fraction of four hundred pairs of all thicknesses and styles. Each morning the proprietor passes up to this chamber of boots, selects the pair which seems to his educated eye most appropriate for the occasion, and marches off in triumph.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1864.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Grant's Great Battles.

Our telegraph despatches show that General Grant has been engaged during the last week in a desperate battle with the rebel forces on the Potomac. The reports are so conflicting that it is difficult to determine whether he had achieved a victory or not. At last accounts he was driving Lee before him, who soon after made a stand at Spottsylvania Court House, A battle was raging at that place on Wednesday afternoon. We have no fears as to the result of that battle. yet the news is looked for with great solicitude.

Butler's operations south of Richmond, in the vicinity of Petersburg, have been very successful this far. He has succeeded in cutting off Beauregard's communication with Lee and thus prevented the possibility of the latter General's hurling fresh troops against Grant.

Gens. Sedgwick and Wadsworth were killed, and the rebel General Longstreet severely wounded.

Honor to Whom Honor is Due.

The Mower County Register copies from the Winona Republican the same article we published last week and, in commenting upon it, makes the following remarks in regard to Senator Wilkinson.

It will be seen that our far-seeing and magnanimous Senator, Wilkinson, is doing what he can, in his high position, for the future prosperity of his adopted State. We ought to take an honest pride in the fact that our young State has so sagacious and able a man in the U. S. Senate. He has few peers there. In securing the passage of this important act, making the generous grants of land mentioned below, Senator Wilkinson in conjunction with Senator Harlan of Iowa, has labored earnestly and indefatigably. Success has crowned their efforts. The effect must be to encourage the building of these impoatant lines of Railroad at an early day. Mower County and all Southern Minnesota, it will be seen, have large interests involved in this matter.

Few Words about Schools.

In entering upon the duties of an important and responsible position it would afford us much relief had we time and talent to embody in language our views upon all the questions connected with the common Schools of Blue Earth County. Our educational matters have been sadly neglected since the breaking out of the War. The heavy tax for men and money to support the government, and the Sioux War have so absorbed the public mind that but little thought has been given to teaching our children. The natural facilities of our county will compare with those of any other in this latitude; the people are intelligent, and there is no reason why our schools should not equal those in other sections. Inprovements can and must be made.

Teachers must prepare their schools for public examinations. A Teacher's Institute should be organized, and a general concert of action should be had.

No single individual can accomplish much without the aid of the people, and it is time for them to turn their attention to this subject. The children of our County will soon be men and women, and take the places their parents now occupy. They need to be educated, and that immediately. An appeal is made to every individual for aid in this matter, and by unity in action much good may be accomplished.

DAVID WILCOX.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.—Hons. M. S. Wilkinson, Alex Ramsey and Wm. Windom will please accept our thanks for valuable public documents received during the past two weeks.

THE Blue Earth Advocate, Contains eight articles all about his "Cousin Henry," who guides the helm of the Homestead, at Winnebago City. Bubby is undoubtedly troubled with "Cousin Henry on the brain."

The Democrats of Faribault County have issued a call for a Mass Convention to come off at Blue Earth City to-morrow, the 14th. The object of the meeting is to elect a delegate to attend the State Convention at St. Paul on the 25th.

THE St. Peter Tribune has an article about the change of land grant to which we shall take exceptions next week.

WE publish in an another column the House resolution making appropriations for the relief of persons for damges sustained in the Sioux War.

WE understand that the House Committee, to whom was referred the bill granting lands to Minnesota and Iowa, for railroad purposes, reported adversely to that part of the bill granting land for a road from McGregor Iowa, to Mankato. We have no positive information, and hope it is not true.

TELEGRAPH NEWS.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Information has been received here that our army has passed safely through the wilderness but nothing further is known this morning of the onward movement. Rumors prevail of fighting but they are founded on mere conjecture, as it was known up to Wednesday morning 7 o'clock that none had taken place. There are troops remaining on this side of the Rapidan, but it is not proper to state their exact location. These include some if not all of the colored soldiers Much of the rolling stock have been sent back to Washington as there is new no further use for it.

The Star in its extra this morning, says the only official information from the army of the Potomac is derived from the desks of the Medical Director and chief Quartermaster to their respective bureaus.

The wounded number from 6,000 to 8,000, and have been sent from the battle field to Rappahannock Station, thence to be forwarded to Washington. A portion of them have arrived at Rappahannock.

The Commissary has made a requisition for grain for the animals, this imports an advance by Gen. Grant.

Gen. Ingalls says we have fought two days, and the enemy are said to be retiring. There seems to be no doubt that although nothing decisive has yet occurred, the enemy has been foiled in his confident expectation of driving Gen. Grant back before his operations could be fully developed, and that Lee has been compelled to give way.

The tactics of the enemy have uniformally been to strike his heaviest blows at the onset, and to this their success has always been owing. This has now failed.

The casualities reported are Gen. Hays killed, and Generals Getty, Griggs and Owens and Col. Hays wounded.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—There seems to be no doubt of the death of Gen. Hays of Pittsburg, Pensylvania. He held the position which bore the brunt of A. P. Hill's attack, and fell at the head of his command just at the moment that support had been ordered forward to reach him. At the latest dates Gen. Banks was at Alexandria and an intimation had been given that he designed to leave that position Orders from Grant require Gen. Banks to afford protection to the gun boats in Red River. His force is strong enough under competent command to bid defiance to any force the rebels can bring against him.

Arrangements for supplies will be made with energy and celerity by Major General Canby, who has gone forward to the field under special instructions.

The line of attack by Lee in the fighting of Thursday and Friday was nearly at right angles with Grant's line of advance and from the direction of Grange Court House, which indicates that Lee has made the latter point his base and headquarters The forced march of a day and night by Burnside from Manasses by which he got his troops to Gen Grant on Thursday night is said not to have been surpassed by his brilliant forced marches in East Tennessee by which he surprised the enemy there.

Probably Lee has by this time had occasion to feel their presence with Grant. Gen. Webb was killed in the battle of Friday.

The Union forces are securely planted in a splendidly advantageous position, within fifteen miles of the rebel capital. Our troops are landing as rapidly as possible. It is now 3 o'clock and by nightfall the greater part of the immense army will disembark.
Our line stretches across this narrow strip of land, the left resting up James River, and there passing over the Little River.

The prolongation of the line will reach to the James, again holding that almost insular position called the township of the Bermudas here. With both flanks of the army protected by gunboats, we can bid defiance to Lee's cohorts if Grant's sharp pressing drives them down upon us.

The position is considered admirable for seriously threatening Richmond. Lee's army is between two fires and should our cavalry raid seriously impair his communications South, starvation will be added to his other troubles.

THE Singer Sewing Machines.

Our LETTER A FAMILY SEWING MACHINE is fast gaining a world-wide reputation. It is beyond doubt the cheapest and best and most beautiful of all Family Sewing Machines yet offered to the public No other Family Sewing Machine has so many useful appliances for Hemming, Binding, Felling, Tucking, Gathering, Gauging, Braiding, Embroidering, Cording and so forth No other Family Sewing Machine has so much capacity for a great variety of work. It will sew all kinds of cloth, and with all kinds of thread Great and recent improvements make our Family Sewing Machine most reliable, and most durable, and most certain in action at all rates of speed. It makes the interlocked stitch, which is the best stitch known. Any one, even of the most ordinary capacity, can see at a glance, how to use the letter A Family Sewing Machine. Our Family Sewing Machines are finished in chaste and exquisite style.

The Folding Case of the Family Machine is a piece of cunning workmanship of the most useful kind. It protects the machine when not in use, and when about to be operated may be opened as a spacious and substantial table to sustain the work.—While some of the Cases, made out of the choicest woods, are finished in the simplest and chastest manner possible, others are adorned and embellished in the most costly and superb manner.

It is absolutely necessary to see the Family Machine in operation, so as to judge of its great capacity and beauty.

It is fast becoming as popular for family sewing as our Manufacturing machines are for manufacturing purposes.

The Branch Offices are well supplied with silk twist, thread, needles, oil, &c., of the very best quality.

Just published, a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure (without medicine) of SPERMATORRHŒA, or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, IMPOTENCY, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc.; also CONSUMPTION, EPILEPSY, and FITS, induced by self-indulgence or sexual extravagance.

☞Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cts.

The celebrated author in this admirable essay clearly demonstrates, from a thirty years successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife—pointing out a mode of cure at once simple certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately, and radically.

☞This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

CLIFTON HOUSE,
Mankato, Minnesota.

THE proprietor would announce to the traveling public that his house is now completed and furnished throughout in the best style and is prepared to accommodate all who may favor him with their patronage From long experience in the hotel business in eastern cities he flatters himself that he understands the wants of the traveling public and will spare no pains to make the Clifton an agreeable stopping place All who may be visiting Mankato either for business or pleasure, especially those from the surrounding counties are invited to call and satisfy themselves. Attached to the premises are stables not excelled in the State, either for capacity or convenience. The proprietor thankful for the very liberal patronage bestowed upon his house, would say to all stopping at the Clifton you will meet the same cordial and welcome reception as heretofore. Farmers sustain the Clifton House and by so doing promote your own interest. A word to the wise is sufficient.

The History of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.—The most remarkable medicine of the day, and the many cures that have been performed with it in cases of Liver Complaint, Dispepsia, Nervous Debility, and other diseases arising from a disordered stomach or liver, places it at once among the most astonishing discoveries that has taken place in the medical world. The diseases to which bitters are applicable are so universal that there are but few of our friends who may not test their virtues in their own families or circle of acquaintances and prove to their own satisfaction that there is at least one remedy among the many advertised medicines, deserving the public commendation.

A Single Box of Brandreth's Pills—contains more vegetable extractive matter than twenty boxes of any pills in the world besides, fifty-five hundred physicians use them in their practice to the exclusion of other purgatives. The first letter of their value is yet scarcely appreciated. When they are better known sudden death and continued sickness will be of the past. Let those who know them speak right out in their favor. It is a duty which will save life.

Our races are subject to a redundancy of vitiated bile at this season, and it is as dangerous as it is prevalent; but Brandreth's Pills afford an invaluable and efficient protection. By their occasional use we prevent the collection of those impurities, which, when in sufficient quantities, cause so much danger to the body's health. They soon cure liver complaint, dyspepsia loss of appetite, pain in the head, heartburn, pain in the breast-bone, sudden faintness and costiveness. SEWING MACHINES.

These Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do: will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood; and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are peculiar facts, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

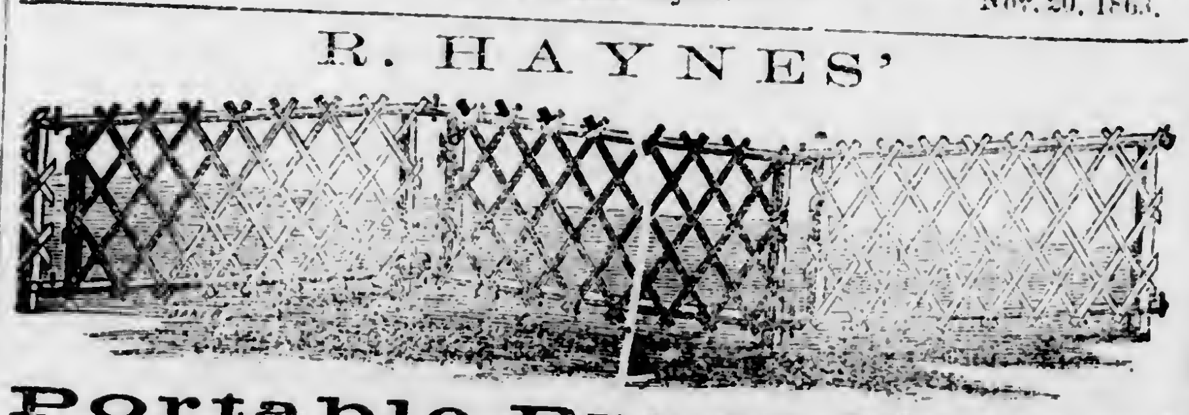
R. HAYNES'



Portable Brace Fence!

PATENTED APRIL 7, 1863.

WE claim for this Fence greater strength and durability with less expense than any ordinary farm fence No farmer who studies economy and convenience in the management of his farm will be without it The First Premium was awarded to Mr Haynes' Portable Fence, at the late State Fairs in Ohio and Michigan, and at several County Fairs. Read the following extract:

"Among the many things we saw on exhibition at the State Fair was Haynes' Portable Brace Fence This fence seems to be a great improvement over most Fences of the kind It is very strong, and is so braced that wind can have no more effect upon it, if as much, as upon a common rail fence. It is light yet heavy enough for all farm purposes Its cost is but little, and much labor is saved by using this fence, as it is easily put up, and in after years easily repaired. Every farmer ought to see this remarkable fence. We hope Mr. Haynes will be induced to exhibit it at our County Fair.—Medina (Ohio) Gazette.

Mr. H has also invented a mould or bench upon which this fence is made. By using this bench any farmer can make the fence at a rapid rate. Full directions for making the bench and the fence upon it accompany each deed For farm or township rights address

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels. Cures Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation, Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex, arising from Bodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome, genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, Hostetter's Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge; and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain, until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable tonic, and hence it works wonders in cases of Dyspepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless aperient, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs. Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous Attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of bilious colic is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to reinforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 22

This Medicine increases the power of Digestion, and excite the Absorbents into healthy action, by which the Watery or Calcareous depositions, and all Unnatural Enlargements are reduced, as well as Pain and Inflamation.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

For Weakness arising from Excesses, Habits of Dissipation, Early Indiscretion, of abuse, attended with the following symptoms:—

Indisposition to Exertion, Loss of power, Loss of Memory, Difficulty of Breathing, Weak Nerves, Trembling, Horror of Disease, Wakefulness, Dimness of Vision, Pain in the back, Universal Lassitude of the Muscular System, Hot Hands, Flushing of the Body, Dryness of the Skin, Eruptions on the Face, Pallid Countenance. These symptoms, if allowed to go on, which this medicine invariably removes, soon follows Impotency, Fatuity, Epileptic Fits, in one of which the Patient may expire.

Who can say that they are not frequently followed by those "Direful Diseases" "Insanity and consumption." Many are aware of the cause of their suffering, but none will confess the records of the insane aslyums. And melancholly deaths by Consumption bear ample witness to the truth of the assertion. The Constitution once affected with organic Weakness, requires the aid of Medicine to Strengthen and Invigorate the system.

Which Helmbold's Extract Buchu invaribly does.

A trial will convince the most skeptical.

Females—Females—Females.—In many affections peculiar to Females the Extract Buchu is unequaled by any other remedy as in Chlorosis or Retention, Irregularity, Painfulness, or suppression of customary Evacuations, Ulcerated or Scirrhous state of the Uterus, Leuchorrhœa or Whites, Sterility, and for all complaints incident to the sex, whether arising from indiscretion Habits of Dissipation, or in the decline or change of life. Take no more Balsam, Mercury, or unpleasant medicines for unpleasant and dangerous diseases. It causes a frequent desire and gives strength to Urinate, thereby removing obstructions, preventing and curing strictures of the Urethra, allaying Pain and inflamation, so frequent in the class of diseases, and expelling all poisonous diseased and wornout matter. Thousands upon thousands who have been the victims of Quacks, and who have paid heavy fees to be cured in a short time, have found they were deceived, and that the poison has, by the use of powerful astringents, been dried up in the system, to break out in an aggravated form, and perhaps after marriage Use Helmbold's Extract Buchu for all affections and diseases of the urinary organs, whether existing in male or female, from whatever cause originating and no matter of how long standing. Diseases of these organs requires the aid of diuretic. Helmbold's extract Buchu is the great diuretic, and it is certain to have the desired effect in all diseases for which it is recommended. The Maiden's Reply.

BY LOUIS GRAYLE.

I love! Go ask yon rock
For love, and then the sea;
And if they answer not your prayer
Oh, come not back to me—
There is far more love than dwells in my heart
In the heart of the restless sea!

I would love you if I could,
You are noble, and good, and true,
And your heart is pure as the glorious earth
When bathed in the summer's dew;
But there is no love in my heart to give,
Tho' you are so good and true.

I loved, but my idol was clay,
And I never shall love any more.
As the foam-crested wave dies away,
And never returns to the shore—[dream,
So the heart which was cheated in love's early
Will never know love any more.

Proud men have knelt at my feet,
While the world looked on in scorn
And said I had neither beauty, nor grace,
Nor wealth, and was lowly born;
Ah! little cared I for its taunting words!
I gave it scorn for scorn.

I have sought to win them, too,
With a semblance of joy that was dead,
With a light in my eyes that died out from my heart,
Ere my girlhood's hours were fled,
But I meant not thus to win your love,
For I knew that my love was dead.

Go, win some noble heart,
Fresh with the joy of youth,
Whose soft cheeks glow, and whose bright eyes shine,
With the light of inward truth,
And my God preserve you evermore,
From a loveless, joyless youth.

A NEW ENGLAND GIRL "OUT IN THE COLD."

BY M. T. CALDOR.

CHAPTER V.

Marion arrived home in season to find the bland and smiling agent, with a couple of soldiers waiting in the deserted ante-room.

Her mother, with a pale, but composed face, hastened to meet her, and exclaimed, loud enough for the interlopers to hear,

'How long you have been? Where is Alice?'

The quick glance from her mother's eye warned Marion of the course to pursue,

'She won't come home to night. Victoria has need of her services: since new goods can't be had, a bridal trousseau is to be renovated from old garments; and you know the skill of Alice's nimble fingers.'

'Miss Clyne,' said the agent, evidently in astonishment, 'she is to marry Col Fitz Hugh. I did not know this Alice Allston was admitted there.'

'And the Colonel has bought the diamonds for Victoria, mamma,' continued Marion, as if in the gayest spirits, 'I brought his receipt to show your friends.'

She flung the paper to her mother, who calmly handed it to the officer.

'You were asking for them: if you know the Colonel's signature, that will convince you they are out of our possession.'

'It's like his writing, sure enough.'

'If you doubt it you'd best go and enquire at his headquarters,' said Marion, indignantly.

The soldiers glanced interrogatingly at their leader.

'We shall have to enquire into it,' said he, at length; 'it will do as well to morrow, I suppose. All hands will have to march to prison then, I reckon.'

And following his gesture, the soldiers withdrew, and in a moment more the agent himself took his departure.

Marion clasped her mother's hands exultingly.

'There is no time to be lost. I have the diamonds, and must sew them up somewhere in my clothes. Best of all I have obtained a pass from Col. Fitz Hugh. We must avail ourselves of it at once, before there is any chance of its being countermanded.'

And she rapidly related all that had occurred at the Colonel's headquarters.

'You are right; we must go at once. I sent poor old Chloe out with all the money left to buy crackers. I thought they were lightest and most serviceable. We must leave half for the poor old creature herself, Heaven knows how she will exist after we are gone; though, indeed, our staying cannot benefit her. Your warm cloak and woollen dress are ready; and I have filled two light travelling bags with needful articles—a little flask of brandy among the rest. I think we might walk the first few miles before dark, and then take shelter in the hedges and rest.'

This plan was immediately adopted. I cannot attempt to depict the thoughts and emotions of these two feeble women as they passed out stealthily from the stately building, which had so long been their proud and happy home, but which stood stripped and solitary, and shorn of all its grandeur.

They were deep and agitating even for utterance; and with downcast eyes and silent lips, the pair sped on their way. Twice ere they left the populous streets, a sentry started forward in their path; but the magical slip of paper in the colonel's handwriting cleared the way; and it was with thankful hearts they at length reached the lonely road, which spared them the need of feigning careless composure.

Although they had walked four miles without pausing, and were nearly exhausted with the unaccustomed exertion, neither proposed resting until they had neared the appointed rendezvous.

It was a damp, uncomfortable spot, with the wretchedly muddy road crossing a swampy meadow, but neither mother nor daughter spoke a word of complaint as they crept under the bushes and matted vines, and hid themselves from sight.

Clasping each other, they sat in silence, while the shades of night gathered, and the cold dew fell profusely on their tired and aching limbs.

Mrs. Walsingham poured a few drops of brandy over one of the crackers, and gave it to her daughter reserving another for herself.

"Remember, my child, how much there is yet before us,' she said gravely, 'We must not neglect to use all means possible for strengthening ourselves at the outset.'

Marion aroused herself from the dreary forebodings that had fallen upon her, and ate the food quietly. She found also a patch of dry moss, and spreading out her extra shawl upon it, made a comparatively dry seat for them both.

And they waited the night patiently through. Who cannot picture the dismal slowness with which those silent, lonesome hours passed off?

At last, Marion suddenly pressed her mother's hand.

'They are coming. I can hear the wheels, and the voices of men.'

Both sprang to their feet, gathered up their light baggage, and went cautiously down to the rear of the fallen tree.

It was certainly a government train. They could distinctly hear the heavy rumble of the huge cart wheels, and the sleepy tones of the drivers calling out to the animals.

They strained their aching eyes as the train came on. Foremost rode abreast some dozen soldiers, their dangling weapons clinking at every step. Then came a row of wagons—one with another body of soldiers, these with guns: their rude jests were every one plainly heard by the shrinking fugitives. And now came the negro drivers and their carts. What a blessed relief it was to hear Jo's voice, though in noisy abuse of his horses.

'What de matter ob de beasts? High now, can't yer keep de track? Whoa! what de tink yer see?'

And as he stopped, pretending to be anxiously correcting his retractory horses, he gave the low whistle agreed upon.

Mrs. Walsingham and Marion stepped out at once, with hearts that seemed suddenly palsied with suspense and fear.

'All right, jump in quick. Whoa, Dick, what de debbel ail yer dis night? Spec ye tink de Yanks are cum.'

And his dexterous hands gave them a powerful lift, and in a trice they were crouching on the floor of the cart, with the old tattered robe thrown over them.

Jo struck up the Bonny Blue Flag at the top of his voice, between the lines saying to them in a suppressed voice,

'Don't be feared—we don't mean to fail this time, any how. We've managed de ting cute; jes you 'blieve dat!'

'Where's Alice—is she here, Jo?' asked Mrs Walsingham anxiously.

'All right, missis, de next cart, dat is hern. Don't you go for to be scart whe de soldiers go to fire dere guns. I tell you, Big Sam seed to dem ere guns, and dey isn't gwine to hurt us, sure now; de wool is pulled clean ober dere eyes, 'stead ob de darkeys. It takes Big Sam to plan dis grate campagner, I tell yer now. We is gwine to come out right.'

'Heaven grant that we may,' murmured Mrs. Walsingham, as she resumed her crouching posture, and hiding her face in her hands, asked herself, in a sort of stupid amazement, if this was she, the proud Virginian mother of Walter Walsingham, who was flying for her life, in the company of a body of runaway slaves, planning desperate measures to gain their liberty!

No wonder an uncanny spell seemed upon her, and she almost expected to wake up the next moment from the nightmare of horror, and find herself again the proud and happy mistress of a luxurious home.

Alas! the cart jolted on, her daughter's cold and clammy hand clutched her frantically, and every now and then she would feel the poor child tremble, as a sentry rode along past them to see that all was right. Still the coldness and darkness, like an icy shroud hung around them, and the dismal dreariness of their forlorn and perilous condition forced itself more and more upon her mind.

Noble hearted, thoroughly refined, carefully educated, the beautiful and prosperous Mrs. Walsingham had hitherto found all her strength and consolation in the world. Even her husband death had not lifted her affections toward Heaven, but she had the more idolatrously poured out her love upon the surviving children. I do not mean that she had neglected or violated any of the ordinances of religion, only that she had never gone with her heart on her lips to the feet of her Saviour.

But now, cowering down beneath the screening robe, clutching desperately at the hands of her trembling child, fell down that haughty soul as abjectly, and utterly humiliatad at the throne of Mercy, as the position of the humbled body. Mrs. Walsingham did what pale and little quiet Alice in the cart behind them, had done long ago, she went with her great need, and earnest petition for the help that was alone sufficient for the extremity, and left her cause with the over-ruling Father of the universe.

The wonderful invigoration of such prayer came over her. She was still faint and feverishly anxious, but the bitterness of her fear was over.

Tenderly supporting poor little Marion in her arms, she whispered words of encouragement, and found another piece of cracker, which she persuaded her to eat.

And now the grey dawn was slowly stealing up the brightening sky. They could hear, if they could not see it, by the increased activity of the train, the more cheery chirrup of the drivers, and the general brightening up.

Jo too was more alert, and between larroping the unfortunate beasts, who had to bear the undeserved lash that he might converse with his secreted passengers without attracting attention, he addressed them cautiously.

"Try and lay closer to de floor, missis, and keep de buffalo ober yer. It's only gwine to be a little time now I wants yer to keep close sure. Neber mind what yer hear; don't go let anyting make yer git up till I comes for yer. I'se or Sam. 'Pears like there'll be shooting; neber you fear, 'twill be on our side, bekase dem guns ob deres aint gwine to go, any how. De cavalry will be gwine long back after dis piece ob woods, and dat's all Sam waits for.'

The two women drew long and quivering breaths, but made no reply.

Meanwhile slowly, and apparently the utmost security, the train passed on. The guards now and then, cast careless glances along the line of dark faces seated on the driving seat, or lying on the broad seats of the carts, evidently fast asleep.

The authorities sent the guard, not for fear of any depredation, upon the stores to be brought back to Knoxville, but in wise precaution against any stampede of the stout negroes, who were such useful auxiliaries to their rapidly accumulating army.

At the usual halting place the cavalry reined in their horses, exchanged a few words with the sleepy set of infantry, and wheeling around went off at a keen trot.

The soldiers shouldered arms, drew themselves up soldier fashion and seemed aware that the management of affairs now devolved upon them.

At the authorative word of the lieutenant—a mere youth—the train once more set off on its route; the cheerful sunbeams slanting upon them and lighting up the scene which might not have seemed unworthy his skilful brush to the most famous painter living, could he have watched the silvery mists stealing upward from the moistened shrubbery, and seen the bright blue carts filing along with the guard of soldiers whose glistening bayonets glinted back the sunbeams that fell upon them. Surely not, if he had marked the keen, swift glance of thrilling significance exchanged from eye to eye, as, on pretence of looking for a cast off shoe belonging to his cart horse, Big Sam, a perfect Ajax in symmetry and strength of figure, his erect, steadily poised head, set on a pair of shoulders broader than any other man's in the whole train, went from van to rear exchanging now a nod, and again but the briefest monosyllables.

In the distance, on the rising hill, shone in the morning light the roofs of the village where they were to find the mutton and corn to look up their empty carts

The soldiers yawned again. It was stupid work—this escorting an ignoble train of provinder, but thank goodness, it was nearly over, and their turn would not come again for a month. So said the lieutenant.

Meanwhile the train turned a bend of the road, losing again the sight of the village, and entering a dense grove, although it extended but a few rods.

The paper having the largest circulation in the world, is now said to be that issued by Secretary Chase. It is an extremely loyal publication, too. It supports both the Administration and the Union.

"Douse Heads."

A few miles from Boston, near a college, resided, some months since, a number of lively young men, who had quarters in a hotel, where they had waited, as a general thing, for something to turn up. Among the waiters at the house was an Englishman, an out and out John Bull, always bragging of the superiority of Englishmen, and everything English—a peculiarity of Englishmen to which Yankees are no strangers. One cool day a number of students were in the office seated around the fire enjoying a cozy chat, when a wag named Lewis entered the apartment.

After a while, when the English waiter was in the room, the conversation turned upon remaining under water for a great length of time without rising to take breath, each one relating his experience, and ending with what he can do. But no Yankees could come within fifty rows of apple trees of our Englishman. Lewis, winking to the boys' said.

'I'll bet suppers for the crowd, that I can stay under water longer without coming up to breathe, than any Englishman that ever said 'God save the queen!'

'Done,' said the waiter.

A committee having been chosen to see that every thing was done fairly, they proceeded to the stable. There was a watering trough of ample dimensions. Divesting themselves of clothing, and getting into the trough, upon the word being, 'Douse heads.' down went both heads under water. No sooner was the head of the Englishman fairly under, than up pops the head of Lewis, who keeping his eye fixed like a cat upon a mouse upon the spot where the head of 'Bull' disappeared waited until the bald pate of the Englishman appeared above the water, when down went Lewis's head as quick as sight.

'What! not up yet?' exclaimed Bull, which was no sooner said than up pops Lewis amid the winks and laughter of the boys.

'Not much of a trial that!, says Lewis.

'Try it again,' shouts Bull.

When the word down go the heads—no sooner under, than out comes the head of Lewis again, waiting as before, and poping under as the appearance of 'Bull,' who, puffing and blowing like a porpoise, looked around in perfect astonishment at the non appearance of the Yankee.

'Not up yet! Cuss him, I'll give him another try!' when up pops Lewis, again, amid the screams of the boys.

'Go it this time, or die,' says Bull.

When, at the word, down they went for the third time. No sooner was Bull fairly under, than Lewis, coming up again, whispers, 'Fix him this time anyhow!'

When Bull had been under long enough to drown any common man, he stuck his head out, looking more like a drowned rat than any specimen of humanity. His astonishment can be imagined, but not described, when looking around, the head of Lewis was nowhere to be seen. Some tall specimen of tumbling and rolling might have been seen when Lewis emerged from under the water, fresh for another trial. Ever after, when Bull was expatiating upon 'What's what' in Old England, all that was necessaay to say to him was 'Douse heads!'

WAY SUMPTER WAS FIRED UPON.—Jere Clemens of Alabama, said in his speech at a recent meeting at Huntsville.

He would tell the Alabamians how their State was got out of the Union. In 1861, shortly after the Confederate government was put in operation, I was in the city of Montgomery. One day I stepped into the office of the Secretary of War, Gen. Walker, and found there, engaged in a very excited discussion, Mr. Jefferson Davis, Mr. Memminger, Mr, Benjamin, Mr. Gilchrist, a member of our legislature from Louder county, and a number of their prominent gentlemen. They were discussing the propriety of immediately opening fire upon Fort Sumpter, to which Gen. Walker, the Secretary of War, appeared to be opposed. Mr. Gelchrist said to him: 'Sir, unless you sprinkle blood in the face of the people of Alabama, they will be back in the old Union in less than ten days!' The next day, Gen. Beauregard opened his batteries on Sumpter, and Alabama was saved to the Confederacy.

A Clergyman Betrays Confidence and Flees Justice.

For somedays it has been rumored that the Rev. Charles B. Thomas, who has been for some years in charge of the First Universalist church of this city, had been guilty of crimes that had forced him precipitately to flee the city. These rumors have grown rapidly, and are to the effect that some years ago a young lady, the daughter of one of the most respectable families in Chicago, was married to a respectable gentleman, and with him left the city, spending some years in Europe. When the family returned, Mr. Thomas had been duly enstalled as pastor of the church. She resided at the East with her husband, and when Mr. Thomas visited there he failed not to call upon a member of a family so highly honored in Chicago, and so influential in his own congregation. Some trouble or disagreement between the husband and wife led the latter to take conncil with the reverend gentleman, who, instead of healing the trifling breach, or smoothing the momentary disturbed feelings of the until now happy pair, seized the opportunity of prosecuting his own infamous designs. How long he practiced his hellish arts, or with what argument he supported his advances, are not stated, but he finally triumphed—triumphed as Satan might over a child. The distressed and broken hearted woman immediately saw her own ruin, and discovered too late the infamy of her spiritual adviser. Her fathtr was sent for and in a few days the father with his stricken child returned to her old home.

It is further stated that the news of the discovery of his villany reached the reverend scoundrel in Chicago, followed by an admonition that the outraged father would not hesitate to execute summary punishment if the wretch continued here to play the role of a clergyman, and that Thomas immediately packed up his trunks and fled the city, to be pursued by public opinion until he abandons a profession to which he is a disgrace.

The reverend individual has been located in Chicago for some three years; formerly he had charge of a church in Chelsea, Massachusetts, and at one time it is said, in New Orleans. To add to the infamy of the man, it must be added that he has a wife upon whom this blow will doubtless fall with great severity.—Chicago Post,

"Thpit on It."

A good story has been told of a lisping officer in the army having been victimized by a brother officer (noted for his cool deliberation and strong nerve,) and his getting square with him in the following manner. The cool joker, the captain, was always quizzing the lisping officer, a lieutenant, for his nervousness.

'Why,' said he, one day, in the presence of his company, 'nervousness is all nunsense; I tell you lieutenant, no brave man will be nervous.'

'Well,' inquired his lisping friend, 'how would you do, thpose a shell with an inch futhee should drop itthelf into a walled angle, in which you had taken thelter from a company of tharp thootherth, and where it was thertain, if you put your nose, you'd get pepered.'

'How,' said the captain, winking at the circle; 'why take it cool and spit on the fuse.'

The party broke up and all retired except the patrol. The next morning a number of soldiers were assembled on the parade and talking in clusters, when along came the lisping lieutenant. Lazily opening his eyes, he remarked:

'I want to try an experiment thith morning, and thee how exceedingly cool you can be.'

Saying this, he walked deliberately into the captain's quarters where a fire was burning on the hearth, and, placing in the hottest center a powder canister, instantly retreated. There was but one mode of egress from the quarters, and that was upon the parade ground, the road being built up for defence. The occupant took one look at the canister, comprehended the situation, and in a moment dashed at the door, but it was fastened on the outside.

'Charley, let me out, for your love of me,' shouted the captain.

'Thpit on the canither!' shouted he in return.

Not a moment was to be lost. He had first caught up a blanket to cover his egress; but now, dropping it, he raised the window and out he bounded, sans culotts, sans everything but a very short under garment; and thus with hair almost on end, he dashed upon a full parade-ground. The shouts which hailed him called out the whole barracks to see what was the matter, and the dignified captain pulled a sargeant in front of him to hide himself.

'Why didn't you thpit on it?' inquired the leutenant.

'Because there were no sharpshooters in front to stop a retreat,' answered the captain.

'All I got to thay, then, ith,' said the lieutenant, 'that you might thafely have done it; for I'll thware there wasn't a thingle grain of powder in it.'

The captain has never spoken of nervousness since.

A pompous parish clergyman felt his dignity mightily offended by a chubby-faced lad, who passed him without touching his hat.

'Do you know who I am, that you pass me in that unmanerly way? You are better fed than taught, I think

'Why, may be it is so, measter, for you teaches me, but I feeds myself!

Mankato, Friday, May 20, 1864.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1864,

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

From Grant's Army.

The nation trusted in Gen. Grant, and has not been disappointed. The desperate battles of the last eight days have given favorable results to the Federal arms, and still the end is not yet. It has been a glorious week's work. The rebel hosts can't stand many more such poundings as Grant has given them, and we may safely count upon celebrating the capture of Richmond on the 4th of July.

Sheridan has succeeded in cutting Lee's communications with Richmond, and is now operating with Butler on the James river. Butler is making good progress in the work before him, and has probably captured Fort Darling ere this.

Sherman's operations in the West have been very successful.

Relief to Pre-Emptors on Winnebago Reservation.

The Secretary of the Interior has published a lengthy report containing his award to claimants for damages on the Winnebago Refervation, and the docket of claims adjudicated by the Register of the St. Peter Land office. We publish below the Secretary's letter, and his award of damages:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington March 8, 1864.

SIR: In obedience to the requirements of the second section of the act of Congress approved July 14, 1862, entitled "An act for the relief of preemptors on the home reservation of the Winnebagoes in the Blue Earth region, in the State of Minnesota," I have the honor to transmit a schedule of the claims that have been presented under said law, and my awards of amounts that should be paid to several of the claimants, respectively, on account of the loss of their improvements by reason of the appropriation of their settlements for the Indian reservation.

The report of the register and receiver at St. Peter, dated January 2, 1863, and accompanying docket, and the testimony in all the cases, are likewise transmitted, as the law requires.

Copies of three letters of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, stating the payments that have been made heretofore for improvements upon the same tracts of land, will also be found among the papers.

The claims are now respectively submitted for the final action of Congress.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. P. USHER, Secretary.

Hon, SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Indian News.

Scout Solon Stevens, with dispatches to headquarters at St. Peter, passed through town yesterday. He brought inteligence of Indians having been seen near Madelia, and that a boy had been shot by them, two arrows passing into his body.

He also brought word that a band of ten prowling indians in Clay County, Iowa, fifteen miles beyond Spirit Lake, had attacked a private and a Sergeant of Co. I. 6th Iowa Cavalry, who were out scouting. A severe hand to hand fight took place in which three of the indians were killed and two wounded. The Sergeant was mortally wounded, it is thought, but the private did not receive a scratch. The remaining Indians escaped.

To assist in hunting up these redskins marauders, Lieut. Andrews of Co H. 2nd Cavalry, with twenty-five men has gone to Madelia, and will scour the country west and south of there, thoroughly.

The Death of the Trapper Everest.

We published an article two or three weeks since in relation to the death of a Mr. Everest, who was out trapping, and was taken sick and died on the Big Cottonwood. The facts then published as to the place and manner of his death have since turned out to be entirely different. Mr. Stevens, the trapper who was with him, stated that Everest died in camp, and that the body was wrapped in a blanket and left there. He stated to Mr, Everest's wife that he buried the body before he left for the settlement.

Mr. Chamberlin, a brother-in-law of Everest, in company with Stevens and another man started to go after the body. When at the Agency, Stevens feigned sickness and was left there two days, Chamberlin coming on to Mankato and waiting here for him. He not appearing they started on without him. When near Spirit Lake they met three trappers named Freeman, Bundy and Pretchett, who said they had found Mr, Everest's body and had buried it. Instead of being forty miles west of Spirit Lake, it was found forty miles north of it about eight miles above Noble's crossing, on the Cottonwood.

Circumstances go to show that both of them had started for the settlements. Everest was taken sick on the way, and unable to go any farther. Stevens undoubtedly robbed him of all his furs, rifle, watch and cap-set, and left him on the prairie to die. The cap-set was fastened to his vest by a cotton string, and instead of being taken off, it was cut, and about two inches of string found on the vest. The rifle and watch Stevens gave to Mr. Chamberlin.

It is supposed by these trappers that Mr. Everest had seen their tracks and traps, and had wandered along the river in search of them. Near where he was found was a pile of fire-wood, and a match partly burned, with which he had tried to make a fire. Failing in this, he crawled up a ravine about four rods to get shelter from the wind, and lay down and died. He had been dead about four days when found. Mr. Chamberlin disinterred the body, and has taken it on to Rochester. Stevens has left for parts unknown.

White & Marks have got the best and cheapest assortment of Balmoral and Hoop Skirts in this section.

FIGURING.—Sissy, of the Mankato vegetable newspaper, says: "The Blue Earth City Advocate, contains eight articles all about his "Cousin Henry," who guides the helm of the Homestead, at Winnebago City. Bubby is undoubtedly troubled with cousin Henry on the brain." Perhaps you'd like to marry cousin Henry, as he is a beauty; but he's not ass enough for you.—Blue Earth City Advocate.

Yes sir; exactly so! That's just why we should like to marry Cousin Henry—on account of his beauty. But we had rather be excused from any such affiliation with you, as you are too much of an ass to suit our fancy. "Go wash in Jordan seven times."

TELEGRAPH NEWS.

PHILADELPHIA, May 16.—A dispatch to the Evening Telegraph from Washington says a squad of the 65th New York regiment who were captured with 600 others in the third days fight, and subsequently paroled, came into our lines on Saturday with the body of Gen. Wadsworth which has been interred by order of Gen, Lee in a neat coffin.

He also saw Gen, Longstreet. He is wounded in his collar bone. The wound was not mortal, but would incapacitate him for active duty for some time. Gen, J. E. B, Stuart, was not down at Richmond at the time Gen. Sheridan was near there and is now in Gen. Lee's army unhurt,

The rebel loss is tremendous, but there is no indication of their giving up yet. The rebel lines are well supplied by lines of interior works, and more are being constructed. Gen. Lee has not been wounded as the surgeon saw and talked with him on Friday, when he gave him permission to take the body of Gen. Wadsworth.

He is of the opinion that the rebels will make a desperate resistence. He says their privations only seem to exasperate them, and they are kept up by the hopes and idea of exhausting and compelling us to abandon the contest.

Gen. Crawford, who was cut off from his command of the Pennsylvania Reserves last week, and supposed to be a prisoner, is reported to have rejoined the Reserves.

Four more boat loads of wounded arrived heae this morning from Aquia Creek.

Some Ohio militia arrived on the Pennsylvania Central to-day, making a fine appearance.

FREDERICKSBURG, May 15.—[Special to World]—No battle fought Friday, and but slight skirmishing which continued during the day and a considerable portion of the night.

The enemy aas again gradually drawn away a portion of his left to position nearer his base of supplies, but we are pressing him so closely, that if he were to weaken his front materially it would be a great risk. A reconstruction of our line was determined on on Friday night, and before daylight yesterday morning our troops commenced an advance.

Rain fell in torrents, and the mud was literally knee deep. Nothwithstanding all obstacles we are trying to work night and day, our men accomplish their advance with cheerful alacrity and resolution entitles them the highest praise, It would not be prudent to state with precision the line adepted; it must be sufficient to say that it is more near to the left. At the close of the fight Thursday we not only held the ground we had taken at the commencement, but also attacked the stronger advanced position.

[Special to World]—Our killed and wounded are almost made good by reinforcements, which have already reached the Army of the Potomac.

Troops have been pouring through this city from the west and elsewhere during the last few day of the past week. It is believed that the number will not amount to less than 20,000 fresh men.

MEMPHIS, May 14.—Advices from Little Rock of the 12th report that Steele is confident of maintaining the line of the Arkansas. Kirby Smith is menacing Pine Bluff in strong force, but the place is well fortified. The Arkansas river is high, and if they can cross they may make trouble on the White river and intercept Steel's communications up that stream.

Gen. Washburne is quite ill with chills and fever.

NEW YORK May, 15.—The Herald's correspondence written on the battle field, the 13th at 3 P. M., says, one of our staff officers informs me that he conversed with a rebel Lieut. a prisoner, who gave him some interesting facts relating to late General Wadswoth. The Gen. he says, lived three days after he fell into their hands and was very kindly treated. He was concious to the hour of his death, and his only regret was not that he had fallen mortally wounded, but that he should die among the enemies of his country, for which he had given his life a cheerful sacrifice.

WASHINGTON, May 15, To Gen. Dix:—An official dispatch from Gen. Sheridan dated via Fort Monroe, 14th, states that on the 9th inst., he marched around the enemy's right flank, and on the evening of that day reached the North Anna river without oppositton. During the night he destroyed the enemy's depot at Beaver Dam, three large trains of over 100 cars, two fine locomotives, two hundred thousand bounds of bacon and other stores, amounting in all to a million and half of rebel rations; and destroyed the telegraph and railroad track for about ten miles, embracing several culverts, captured 258 men including two colonels and major and several other officers.

On the morning of the 7th he resumed operations, crossing the South Anna at Grand Squirel Bridge, and went into camp about daylight, On the 11th he captured Ashland Station, destroyed here one locomotive and a train of cars, and two or three great buildings containing a large amount of stores; also destroyed several miles of railroad, embracing six culverts and trestle bridges and telegraph wires.

At 11 o'clock A. M. of the 11th he resumed the march on Richmond. He found the rebel Gen. Stuart with his cavalry command concentrated at Yellow Tavern. An attack was made upon the enemy, and after an obstinate contest gained possession of the brook turnpike, capturing two pieces of artillery and driving his forces back towards Ashland and across the north fork of the Chickahominy, At the same time a party charged down the brook road and captured first line of the enemy's works around Richmond.

During the night he marched the whole of his command between the first and second line of the enemy's works on the bluffs overlooking the line of the Virginia Central Railroad, and the Merchanicsville turnpike,

After demonstrating around the woods and finding them very strong he gave up the intention of assaulting, and determined to recross the Chickahominy at Meadow Bridge. It had been partially destroyed by the enemy, but was repaired in about three hours under a heavy artillery fire from the rebel battery. Gen, Merrill made the crossing, attacked the enemy, and drove him off handsomely, the pursuit continued as far as Gaines Mills.

BUFFALO, May, 17.—The World's special says Beauregard, with a large force, marched from Weldon and Petersburg, reaching Richmond on the way to Lee. On the other hand a rebel Major captured, says Butler has Beauregard fastened in Petersburg, and can't help Lee.

The general opinion is that under Gilmore and Smith the operations againgt Fort Darling will be short and successful. Sappers were already within 300 yards of the Fort. Bragg commands the defenses of Richmond. Beauregard is also said to be in Richmand, organizing a reserve army for Lee.

HEADQUARTERS, May 15—2 P. M.—[Special to Times.]—The enemy continues to strengthen his works. It is fully expected however, that a vigorous turning movement will compel the evacuation of the rebel lines without a battle.

Yesterday P. M., the rebels suddenly developed a line of battle on our left, coming through the woods and gobbling up several of our pickets and driving back the reserve. Generals Meade and Wright with staff were out beyond the front at the time, and had an extremely narrow escape from capture, Immediately afterwards Wright threw out a force under cover of artillery fire, and retook the position which was an important one.

NEW YORK. May, 17.—The World learns that large reinforcements have have gone to General Butler, and that his force amounts to 60,000, divided into three forces, one menacing Petersburg, keeping the rebel troops there, another besieging Fort Darling, and a third, which is larger than the others, marching on Richmond.

Prominent officers have predicted that the city will be ours by the 18th

In addition to the reinforcements alluded to, Sheridan's cavalry is expected to render great assistance to Butler.

Information is also received that Gen. Kantz has cut the Danville Road.

Reply to F. E. W.'s "McClellan" in Last Week's Record.

BY THE EDITOR.

Yes! Mac's as great a "hero" as ever beat the South,
Won glory from inaction, or fled from cannon's mouth;
Pope likens him to one, who, with military skill,
Built a bridge, and couldn't cross it just for want of will.
McClellan was our leader, then did the soldiers cry,
"We'll follow his brave sword till we conquer or we die."
Ah! no; they knew by instinct, that when fighting should be done,
He would, by some grand strategy, contrive to lead a run.
But then, he's such a splendid fellow, such tremendous power he wields,
Reviewing his grand army, with two Princes at his heels.
He says, "I am commander. I'll do just as I please.
Plunge the land in debt, and vote for copperhead nominees."
Yes! McClellan is a "hero," we'll give the devil his due,
Though hated by the many, and worshiped by the F. E. W.

Attention is directed to the advertisement inviting proposals for provisions for the Winnebago Indians.

FINE TABLE SALT.—A choice lot of table salt have Finch & Thurston. They have also some excellent canned peaches, and lemon and blackberry jell that will make your mouth water to look at. A word to the wise is sufficient.

HORSES FOR COMPANY E.—Captain Slaughter returned from Fort Snelling last Sunday, bringing with him over a hundred horses for Company E. 2nd Cavalry. "A good lot of horses," says the Captain, "though somewhat thin."

PENMANSHIP.—We notice that Prof. A. J. Shaw is teaching Penmanship in Hastings, and is meeting with good success. That's just what he deserves; but keep your left eye on him, Todd, or he'll carry off some one of your Hastings' belles.

HORRIBLE.—A reliable gentleman of respectability, while coming down the Agency hill last Wednesday morning just after dark, saw a gopher wink. He hadn't gone more than three-quarters of a mile before he also winked. A physician was soon after summoned, who prescribed that he should purchase a suit of summer clothes at White & Marks' cheap cash store.

BOOK STORE.—A good book store is something that Mankato has long needed. We are glad to state that this desideratum is, in part, supplied by Messrs. Lewis & Frisbie and Wickersham & Kilgore. They have brought on from the East quite a supply of good literature, scientific and historical works, histories of the rebellion, and many recent publications. They sell them at very low rates—too low for this market, and we advise our readers to purchase of them instead of sending to St. Paul.

GOPHER HUNT.—Vernon Centre folks go fur to enjoy themselves. They recently got up a gopher hunt which came off last week, and the contestants partook of an excellent supper at the expense of the beaten party. They killed 1276. They have since offered prizes to such of their boys as shalt kill the greatest number of gophers. The boys have instituted a regular guerrilla warfare, and their slaughter of gophers exceeds Gen. Grant's slaughter of rebs on the Potomac.

WE call attention to the card of Messrs, Williard & Barney, which will be found in our advertising columns this week. Our citizens in this vicinity need not to be reminded that this popular law firm is reliable and prompt in all its transactions; but for the information of strangers of whom there are many stopping here, we state that they advertise nothing but what they can furnish. They are among our oldest settlers, and those having business in their line cannot do better than to consult with and employ them.

GERMAN SCHOOL.—Mr. Wideman, a German teacher, is expected to locate here in a few days. The German citizens of this place have already procured for him about fifty scholars. He offers to give private lessons in the German language, and also in music, at reasonable rates. His school will be at Bigler's Hall. The ladies will be pleased to learn that Mr. W. is a competent piano tuner, and that they can secure his services for that purpose.

ENROLLING OFFICERS.—In accordance with instructions from the War Department, a new enrollment will soon be made in this and other States. Deputy Provost Marshal Pugh has appointed as enrolling officers for this county, Josiah Keene, of Mankato, William Russel, of Sterling, and M, B. Haynes, of Vernon. All good appointments.

DEATH IN COMPANY E.—Darius N. Chapman, a private in Company E. Second Cavalry, died at the Hospital in St. Peter last week, of lung fever. His body was brought to camp on Tuesday, and the funeral took place on the day following. He enlisted from Shelbyville in this County.

OUR readers will bear with us this week in the quantity of reading matter in this issue. We have been very short of help, and unable to procure any. We expect to have sufficient from St. Paul in a few days, and then, the UNION, as of yore shall be filled with reading matter, and will suit in every respect.

LADIES' AID SOCIETY have done noble deeds in the way of soliciting donations and preparing hospital stores for our brave Western soldiers. The ladies deserve credit for the interest they have manifested in this matter. Yesterday they sent to the St. Louis Sanitary Fair a box filled with donatoins and prepared hospital stores, amounted to $270. This speaks well for the Society, and for our citizens who have given so liberally.

A HANDSOME MACHINE.—We called into Meagher's the other day, and examined the most complete Self-Raker we have ever seen. It is a model of the J. H. Manny machine with Wood's celebrated Self Raker attached. This machine has been thoroughly tested in New York and other States for years among the most practical farmers of the country, and has given perfect satisfaction in every instance. Meagher is selling reapers fifteen dollars cheaper than other dealers in the county, and we advise all good farmers to call and examine his machines before they purchase.

MILLINERY.—Madame Potts has received her spring goods, and those ladies that have examined them say they are 'perfectly elegant." She has all the latest styles of bonnets, and bonnet trimmings, misses' hats of beautiful patterns, ribbons and flowers of all kinds, and ladies' collars, gloves, and—c o r-s e-t s. She hasn't the conscience to charge more than half what they are worth; so ladies, call soon before "a change comes o'er the spirit of her dream."

Mrs. Oglesby has just ordered another lot of goods, she having sold out her first installment.

Mrs. Sanderson has opened a milliner and dressmaking shop opposite the Clifton, and is prepared to dispatch work promptly.

Annual Taxes for 1864.

The attention of tax-payers is hereby called to the provision of the United States Excise Law relative to the assessment of annual taxes.

By the sixth section of the act of July 1. 1864, it is made the duty of all persons, partnerships, firms, associations, or corporations, made liable to any annual duty, license, or tax, on or before the first Monday of May in each year, to make a list or return to the Assistant Assessor of the District where located of the amount of annual income, the articles or objects charged with a special tax, and the business or occupation liable to pay any license

Every person who shall fail to make such return by the day specified will be liable to be assessed by the Assessor according to the best information which he can obtain; and in such case the Assessor is required to add fifty per centum to the amount of the items of such list.

Every person who shall deliver to any Assessor any false or fraudulent. list or statement, with intent to evade the valuation or enumeration required by law, is subject to a fine of five hundred dollars; and in such case the list will be made out by the Assessors or Assistant Assessor, and from the valuation and enumeration so made there can be no appeal.

Payment of the annual taxes, except those for license will not be demanded until the thirtieth day of June.

The appropriate blanks on which to make return and all necessary information, will be furnished by Wm. Ried, Assistant Assessor for the sixteenth Division, to whom the returns should be delivered on or before the first Monday of May, at his office, in Mankato.

THE HISTORY OF HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS.—The most remarkable medicine of the day, and the many cures that have been performed with it in cases of Liver Complaint, Dispepsia, Nervous Debility, and other diseases arising from a disordered stomach or liver, places it at once among the most astonishing discoveries that has taken place in the medical world. The diseases to which bitters are applicable are so universal that there are but few of our friends who may not test their virtues in their own families or circle of acquaintances and prove to their own satisfaction that there is at least one remedy among the many advertised medicines, deserving the public commendation.

A SINGLE BOX OF BRANDRETH'S PILLS.—contains more vegetable extractive matter than twenty boxes of any pills in the world besides, fifty-five hundred physicians use them in their practice to the exclusion of other purgatives. The first letter of their value is yet scarcely appreciated. When they are better known sudden death and continued sickness will be of the past. Let those who know them speak right out in their favor. It is a duty which will save life.

Our race are subject to a redundancy of vitiated bile at this season, and it is as dangerous as it is prevalent; but Brandreth's Pills afford an invaluable and efficient protection. By their occasional use we prevent the collection of those impurities, which, when in sufficient quantities, cause so much danger to the body's health. They soon cure liver complaint, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, pain in the head, heartburn, pain in the breast-bone, sudden faintness and costiveness. Sold by Wickersham, & Kilgore, Mankato Minn. and by all respectable dealers in medicines. 42

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do: will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood; and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

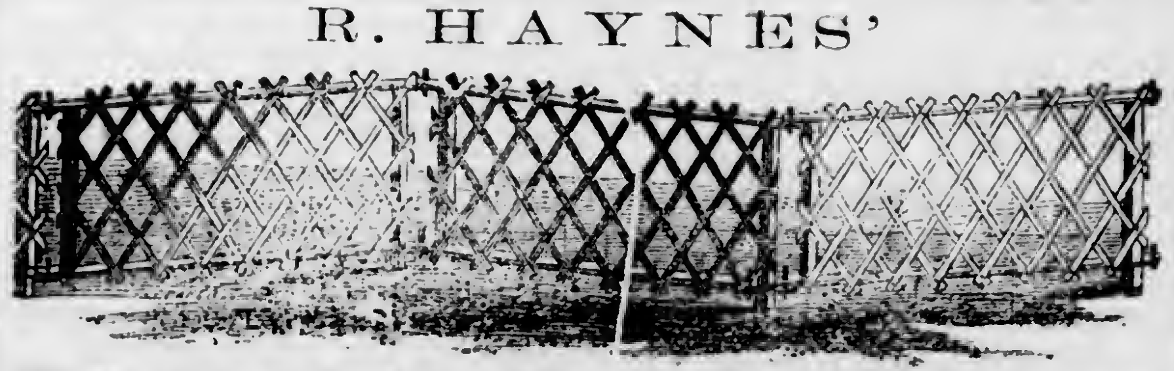
R. HAYNES'



Portable Brace Fence!

PATENTED APRIL 7, 1863.

WE claim for this Fence greater strength and durability with less expense than any ordinary farm fence. No farmer who studies economy and convenience in the management of his farm will be without it. The First Premium was awarded to Mr. Haynes' Portable Fence, at the late State Fairs in Ohio and Michigan, and at several County Fairs. Read the following extract:

"Among the many things we saw on exhibition at the State Fair was Haynes' Portable Brace Fence. This fence seems to be a great improvement over most Fences of the kind. It is very strong, and is so braced that wind can have no more effect upon it, if as much, as upon a common rail fence. It is light, yet heavy enough for all farm purposes. Its cost is but little, and much labor is saved by using this fence, as it is easily put up, and in after years easily repaired. Every farmer ought to see this remarkable fence. We hope Mr. Haynes will be induced to exhibit it at our County Fair.—Medina (Ohio) Gazette.

Mr. H. has also invented a mould or bench upon which this fence is made. By using this bench any farmer can make the fence at a rapid rate. Full directions for making the bench and the fence upon it accompany each deed. For farm or township rights address M. B HAYNES, Agent for Minnesota,

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Boodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparations contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine, Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs: Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of billious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally resorting to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

For Weakness arising from Excesses, Habits of Dissipation, Early Indiscretion, of abuse, attended with the following symptoms:—

Indisposition to Exertion,	Loss of power,
Loss of Memory,	Difficulty of Breathing,
Weak Nerves,	Trembling,
Horror of Disease,	Wakefulness,
Dimness of Vision,	Pain in the Back,

Universal Lassitude of the Muscular System, Hot Hands, Flushing of the Body, Dryness of the Skin, Eruptions on the Face Pallid Countenance These symptoms, if allowed to go on, which this medicine invariably removes, soon follows Impotency, Fatuity, Epileptic Fits, in one of which the Patient may expire.

Who can say that they are not frequently followed by those "Direful Diseases."

"Insanity and consumption." Many are aware of the cause of their suffering, but none will confess the records of the insane aslyums. And melancholly deaths by Consumption bear ample witness to the truth of the assertion. The Constitution once affected with organic Weakness, requires the aid of Medicine to Strengthen and Invigorate the system.

Which Helmbold's Extract Buchu invariably does,

A trial will convince the most skeptical.

Females—Females—Females—In many affections peculiar to Females the Extract Buchu is unequaled by any other remedy as in Chlorosis or Retention, Irregularity, Painfulness, or suppression of customary Evacuations, Ulcerated or Scirrhous state of the Uterus, Leuchorrhœa or Whites, Sterility, and for all complaints incident to the sex, whether arising from indiscretion Habits of Dissipation, or in the decline or change of life. Thousands upon thousands who have been the victims of Quacks, and who have paid heavy fees to be cured in a short time, have found they were deceived, and that the poison has, by the use of powerful astringents, been dried up in the system, to break out in an aggravated form, and perhaps after marriage. Use Helmbold's Extract Buch for all affections and diseases of the urinary organs, whether existing in male or female, from whatever cause originating and no matter of how long standing. Diseases of these organs requires the aid of diuretic Helmbold's extract Buchu is the great diuretic, and is certain to have the desired effect in all Diseases for which it is recommended. CLIFTON HOUSE,

Mankato, Minnesota.

THE proprietor would announce to the traveling public that his house is now completed and furnished throughout in the best style and he is now prepared to accommodate all who may favor him with their patronage. From long experience in the hotel business in eastern cities he flatters himself that he understands the wants of the traveling public and will spare no pains to make the Clifton an agreeable stopping place. All who may be visiting Mankato, either for business or pleasure, especially those from the surrounding counties are invited to call and satisfy themselves. Attached to the premises are stables not excelled in the State either for capacity or convenience. The proprietor thankful for the very liberal patronage bestowed upon his house, would say to all stopping at the Clifton you will meet the same cordial and welcome reception as heretofore. Farmers sustain the Clifton House and by so doing promote your own interest. A word to the wise is sufficient.

THE HISTORY OF HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS.—The most remarkable medicine of the day, and the many cures that have been performed with it in cases of Liver Complaint, Dispepsia, Nervous Debility, and other diseases arising from a disordered stomach or liver, places it at once among the most astonishing discoveries that has taken place in the medical world. The diseases to which bitters are applicable are so universal that there are but few of our friends who may not test their virtues in their own families or circle of acquaintances and prove to their own satisfaction that there is at least one remedy among the many advertised medicines, deserving the public commendation.

A SINGLE BOX OF BRANDRETH'S PILLS—contains more vegetable extractive matter than twenty boxes of any pills in the world besides, fifty five hundred physicians use them in their practice to the exclusion of other purgatives. The first letter of their value is yet scarcely appreciated. When they are better known sudden death and continued sickness will be of the past. Let those who know them speak right out in their favor. It is a duty which will save life.

Our face are subject to a redundancy of vitiated bile at this season, and it is as dangerous as it is prevalent; but Brandreth's Pills afford an invaluable and efficient protection. By their occasional use we prevent the collection of those impurities, which, when in sufficient quantities, cause so much danger to the body's health. They soon cure liver complaint, dyspepsia loss of appetite, pain in the head, heartburn, pain in the breast-bone, sudden faintness and costiveness. Sold by Wickersham, & Kilgore, Mankato Minn. and by all respectable dealers in medicines. 42

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do: will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood; and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

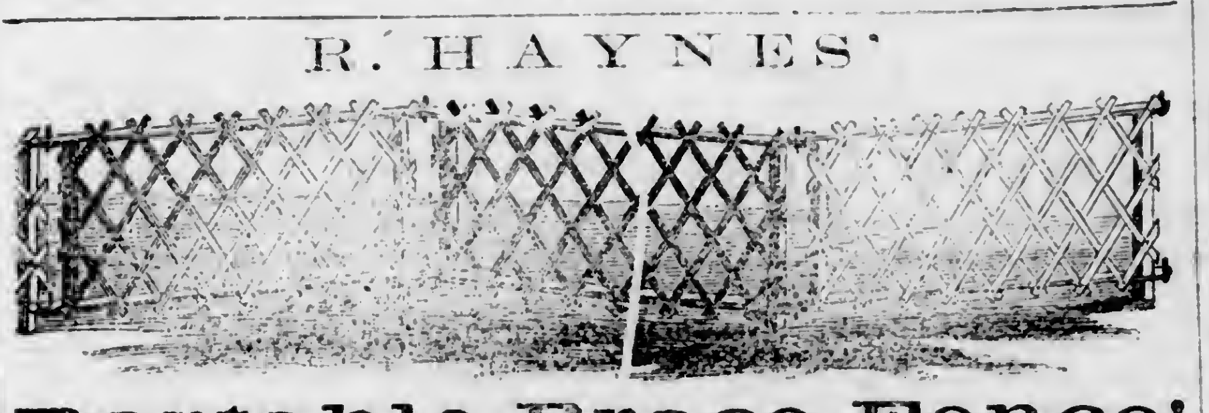
R. HAYNES'



Portable Brace Fence!

PATENTED APRIL 7, 1863.

WE claim for this Fence greater strength and durability with less expense than any ordinary farm fence. No farmer who studies economy and convenience in the management of his farm will be without it. The First Premium was awarded to Mr. Haynes' Portable Fence, at the late State Fairs in Ohio and Michigan, and at several County Fairs. Read the following extract:

"Among the many things we saw on exhibition at the State Fair was Haynes' Portable Brace Fence. This fence seems to be a great improvement over most Fences of the kind. It is very strong, and is so braced that wind can have no more effect upon it, if as much, as upon a common rail fence. It is light, yet heavy enough for all farm purposes. Its cost is but little, and much labor is saved by using this fence, as it is easily put up, and in after years easily repaired. Every farmer ought to see this remarkable fence. We hope Mr. Haynes will be induced to exhibit it at our County Fair.—Medina (Ohio) Gazette.

Mr. H. has also invented a mould or bench upon which this fence is made. By using this bench any farmer can make the fence at a rapid rate. Full directions for making the bench and the fence upon it accompany each deed. For farm or township rights address M. B. HAYNES, Agent for Minnesota,

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Boodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs. Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of bilious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-inforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

The Warning Voice.

BY MARIAN A. BIGELOW.

[The following beautiful lines, handed to us with a request to publish, were found among some articles belonging to a young lady who departed this life at the early age of fifteen. They are so appropriate to her case, and so clearly express the "mystic voice of warning," that one would think they were written with a peculiar "knowledge of the unseen future."]

Hark! a mystic voice is calling,
Soft and low,
And a gloom is round me falling,
I must go.

I must go in youth's bright morning,
When my sky is clear,
For this strange, strange voice of warning,
Now is in my ear.

Earth looks bright, and hope are beaming
All around my way;
And my spirit has been dreaming
Of a longer stay.

But this restless, high ambition,
And this hope sublime,
May not yield their full fruition,
On the shores of time.

And the lofty thoughts aspiring,
Ranging unconfined,
And the quenchless, deep desiring
Of the immortal mind.

Say, must these be quenched forever
In an early tomb?
They will never, never, never,
Be eclipsed in gloom.

Earthly friends must shortly fail me,
Earthly hopes must die,
But far truer friends will hail me,
In a fairer sky.

Hark! that mystic voice of warning
Soft and low,
Death's dark mists are round me falling,
I must go.

A NEW ENGLAND GIRL "OUT IN THE COLD."

BY M. T. CALDOR.

And here Big Sam sent up a wild sort of chant, which produced a wonderful effect. Every driver, mulato, as black as ebony, leaped suddenly from his place, and in a trice there was a close compact body of improvised soldiers, for somehow every man, as if by magic, had a stout musket against his shoulder, and they seemed to fall in to military shape naturally as a duck takes to water, and with Big Sam for their leader, they went at a double quick toward the amazed squad of confederates.

'Ready aim,' shouted the boyish lieutenant.

And up went the shining row of deadly barrels.

Big Sam's shout of derision forestalled the order to fire.

Click—click! What ailed the guns? How the look of amazement, on every face gave way to baffled rage, as the hands went driving into the catridge boxes, and found only sand and pebles where should be powder and shot.

'It is my turn now,' shouts Big Sam, that stentorian voice of his, steady as the iron sinews of the brawny arm holding the trusty rifle.

'Ready! aim!.

Up went the guns with sable hands, grasping them, and the staring eyeballs took correct sight, any one might see.

The lieutenant sorely mistrusted it was not sand or pebbles on the other side, and threw up his hands deprecatingly.

'Hold!' cried he. 'What do you want?'

'We want you to surrender unconditionally, and without any fuss. In that case I swear to you your lives shall be safe.'

The poor boy was terribly frightened; but he gnawed his feebly moustached lip in rage.

'They will kill us for yielding,' he muttered.

'We cannot waste time,' said Big Sam, sternly. 'You will certainly be killed if you do refuse. What can you do with empty guns? Look sharp, boys—ready, aim!'

'Surrender, surrender,' exclaimed the frightened soldiers; and one by one they threw down their guns and came to Sam's side.

He sent part of his force back to the wagons, and with the others took the prisoners from the road into the bushes.

'Take off your uniform, every one of you,' was the next premptory order.

It was done. That stern face enforced speedy obedience.

'Now where are you, Pete, Adolph, Mose? come quick to your clothes, and bring the others?'

And forthwith from the carts emerged a dozen laves—some of them as white as the soldiers whose clothing they at once assumed; and as they shouldered the confederate guns, there was the guard over again.

Big Sam smiled grimly, as with a droll sense of the comical change, the men began gesticulating furiously at the crest fallen prisoners, admirably mimicing the manner invaribly used towards themselves.

Ropes and handcuffs were in readiness, and the discomfitted guard were soon tied securely, one by one, to the slender trees just out of sight of the road. Sam unceremoniously emptied the lieutenant's pockets and secured all the needed papers.

'Now for the gags!' said he.

'For Heaven's sake!' cried the lieutenant.

'Hush! be thankful we don't treat you after the fashion dealt to us. Keep quiet and you are safe; gaged you shall be. Do you think we shall half do our work? When we are safe we will leave word for some one to come to your relief. Keep yourselves patient till then, and be grateful you are left peaceably, without trying the virtues of the branding iron, or being hunted down with blood-hounds.'

So saying, he whirled round, and beckoned toward him the men who were to complete the work, while he hastily gave the papers to the slender quadroon boy, Philip, who certainly made quite an improvement on the late lieutenant's appearance; for his handsome face adorned the clothes he had so unceremoniously assumed.

This Philip was once a petted member of his master's family, and his acquirements and genteel address had been the inducements that made Big Sam give to him the nominal command of the party, which in reality his own cool head, and quick sagacity, held in sway.

Half an hour's delay, and then the train moved on again, and to a careless eye, nothing was changed. There was the guard, keeping step in decidedly better time, (for Sam's three weeks' drilling had not been in vain) and there were the meek faced teamsters plodding along on foot, as they mounted the ascent leading into the village—everything safe and in good order, as the quartermaster's assistant might well believe, when he came out to the door of the well stocked warehouse when the lieutenant knocked boldly.

'Going to rest before you load up?' asked he, nodding graciously to the short bow of the shoulder-strapped youth, who stared around him with the utmost nonchalence.

'I've given orders for them to feed the horses. We've got a longer job than we thought—we are to go on a dozen miles further, and get some bacon and hard tack, confiscated out of some fool who went in for the rotten old Union. I reckon they'll send in another train to-morrow for your stock.'

'Why that's different from the arrangement—they hurried me up so I thought there was desperate need of it.'

'May be the quartermaster is afraid the other stuff will be run off. It is a late thing—the countermanding orders, Got a weed any where? And thrusting his hands into his pockets, Philip went sauntering into the building.

The cigar given him, he flung down the money for it, and puffing at it meanwhile, took out the papers in his pocket and began looking them over.

'I say look sharp, old fellow! if the other stuff is missing. I'm to come back for this. I've got the papers right for either state of affairs. Are them items all correct in this order upon you?'

'All right—everything is ready; but I would not have worked myself so like a nigger if I han't thought it would'nt do to go over another day.

'No harm in everybody's working for this cause, you know—niggers and all, confound their lazy bones! I'll warrant those horses aint half fed,' and he sauntered to the door and screamed out.

'Sargeant, hurry up those niggers, we've a good days work before us. I think we'll ride a spell now while the horses are fresh. Keep a sharp lookout none of 'em desert.

And then, once again, amidst the stares of a crowd of village people, the train moved on.

As soon as the village was left behind, Big Sam drove along the line.

'Drive fast now, boys—never mind the horses—the poor brutes would be used up soon anyhow. We must do the best we can towards getting out of reach, and steer clear of telegraph lines, and railroads. Phil—I've got the route marked down. When we can't use the carts longer we'll take to our legs.'

'Cheer up, missis,' called out Jo; 'spec yer'll 'low dat dis ting is done complete. Yer can sit up now Dev'll tink I'm given some poor creeters a ride. And take a bite, and nebber be down hearted, kase de worstest is done. I'll hab Miss Alice in dis cart wid ye, and den yer'll feel more peart.'

CHAPTER VI.

The flying train twice came upon almost certain destruction; but owing to Phil's perfect coolness, and Sam's ready wit, and most of all, the important papers they had taken from the lieutenant, they escaped; but, after a general consultation, it was decided it would no longer do to remain in company. They separated therefore, into groups of two and three.

Big Sam, who had been profoundly interested in the story told him by Jo, of Allie Allston's kindness to his race, kept the ladies and Jo in his company, and also Lieut. Phil, who personated Mrs. Walsingham's son, while Jo and Sam were slaves helping get the family to a poor wounded soldier in the confederate hospitals near the front.

With this account for passport, and the colonel's pass beside, the ladies, after incredible exposure and many narrow escapes from discovey, reached the mountainous district The horses and cart—the former worn to skeletons, were abandoned here, and the party set out on foot to find their way across the mountains into Western Virginia.

It would be heart rending to depict how these delicate women traveled day and night, hiding from the sight of men; often famishing for food, always weary and worn, but with hearts that grew more and more steadily set upon escape into the free air of the loyal States, and beyond believing, tenderly touching, to show how faithfully those three slaves watched over them, and saved them as much as was possible, from fatigue and harm, treating them with the same delicate respect, and deferential humility that had marked their demeanor in the old days when the overseer had snapped his whip at them, and set them upon their unpaid tasks.

But at length—which of them would ever in their lives forget it? one clear morning, when the early sunshine turnes the dewdrops on the shrubs to pearls and diamonds, the party having just partaken of their rude breakfast of partidges the men had shot, grilled the best way possible over the coals they concealed in a hollow amidst overhanging trees, so the smoke should not betray them—the party came forth and resumed their march, keeping always in the fields and woods, but of necessity approaching a road that led from over a sparsely settled country, and suddenly their ears were startled by the steady trot of hoofs, answered by the shrill call of a bugle.

Every one there felt the heart throb with terror, never doubting it was a troop of confederate cavalry. Big Sam, waving them back to the thicket, crept himself on his hands and knees, till, through the parted bushes, he could get a glimpse of the road.

What was their astonishment to see him suddenly rise from his knees, and flinging up his hat hurrah wildly at the same time frantically gesticulating for them to come.

With trembling limbs, the rest of the party followed to the roadside and the gap in the bushes where Sam had vanished

Who shall depict their unutterable joy when they saw the troops halted, while their leader who was earnestly conversing with Sam, stood beneath the glorious fold of the dear old flag

'Federal troops! oh, aunt, they are our friends!' cried Alice bursting into tears of thank-giving.

Mrs Walsingham closed her eyes, and turned so white, Marion sprang to her side.

The commanding officer advanced towards them and bowed respectfully, while he asked them if their servant had rightfully explained their wish to escape to the Federal lines

Mrs. Walsingham aroused herself from the intense emotion that had overpowered her.

'It is indeed our only hope,' said she gravely; 'and we shall owe to you an everlasting obligation if you can take us there.'

'If you can bear the fatigue of a forced march, we can give you a place on some of our horses, or stop and seize some animals for your use at the first rebel sympathiser's stable. Our brigade belongs to Western Virginia, but we can give you safe escort beyond danger.'

'May Heaven be praised!' ejaculated the three ladies clinging to each other, with a burst of such emotion as their direst experience had not called from them.

And after other weary days, extending to weeks, our party at length found themselves as far as Baltimore. A fine new gunboat lay moored at the wharf, whither they had come to find a passage further North, and an officer had just left the boat, and passed them carelessly.

A sudden cry turned him about as if it had been a secesh cannon ball.

'Walter!' has escaped involuntrily from Allie's lips.

Lieutenant Commander Walter Walsingham came slowly towards them.

That group of meanly clad, weary looking, forlorn women, who were they, to call his name?

The faded bonnet was pushed away from the still haughtily erect head of the tallest figure.

'My son, take me somewhere that I may fall on my knees, and, groveling at your feet, ask your pardon for my wicked, unnatural conduct,' cried she passionately.

Walter stared at the three like one demented.

'Am I dreaming? can this be my mother, and Marion, and poor little Allie? What does it mean?'

'Have you no word of greeting?' cried Mrs. Walsingham bitterly; but I own it is deserved. I admit I set you a worse example.'

'Dear Walter, we have just escaped from the most trying scenes, and through incredible hardships and are scarcely alive, but we come to you true Unionists, purged by fire from the dross of Southern sympathy,' said Marian reproachfully.

'My dear, dear mother, and precious sister, I must be pardoned that I did not comprehend what it meant to see you here, and remember I have heard not a single word from you since those cruel letters. Come with me to my hotel; your hardships are ended now.'

'We have had to beg our bread half the way,' said Mrs. Walsingham, trembling violently. 'Your father's estate is all gone, Walter, and we are utterly penniless. It might have been different had I not so long held my hardness of heart.'

'Let it pass,' said Walter carelessly. 'I have been more fortunate than I deserve. What the Southern cause has taken from me, the Northern one can replace. It will be a grateful task for me to care for you.'

'His mother drew down her tattered veil to hide her shame and tears, as she was led up the steps of the fashionable hotel, which, on her last tour, she had visited as one of the elegant and wealthy ladies of fashion.

'And by the way, Allie dear, I saw Moreton yesterday. He has just arrived, and is in the utmost distress of mind at the reports from East Tennessee. He confided to me what I wish I had known before, and left for New York in the evening train, to find some way of getting out there through the protection of the English Consul. I must telegraph to bring him back.'

'No, no, do not telegraph,' cried Allie in terror—'he will think—'

'Nothing derogatory to you, my precious little cousin,' interrupted Walter Walsingham laughing at her blushes; 'for he will not admit England or America either can furnish such a piece of perfection as Miss Allie Allston. He wrote to you, he says, to be ready for his return, and he is nearly frantic least some harm has come to you from your well known Union sentiments, though I did my best to assure him my mother's protection would save you.'

'Your assurance was without foundation,' said Mrs. Walsingham sorrowful. 'If it had not been for Jo, Alice would have been dragged away to prison on pretence of communicating with you I shudder to tell you of the horrible cruelties practiced and permitted.'

'Where is Jo? I must find him a worthy situation.'

'And Big Sam Oh, Walter, he will enjoy a place on your gunboat.'

'He shall have it. You say they are to come to the packet office—I will send to have them brought here, and I must also send to Madame G——, the dressmaker, to come prepared to execute orders with despatch. I must have you all looking like yourselves before I present you to be the lions of the drawing room.'

Mrs. Walsingham burst into tears.

'Oh, Walter, how you are heaping coals of fire on my head.'

No, no dearest mother, nothing of the sort—only fulfilling my grateful duty to one of the tenderest of parents, saving that one brief period of mistaken zeal for an unfortunate cause'

'Mistaken indeed! Oh, Walter, I was insane with passion and grief. But it was half Victoria's fault.'

Walter winced at the name, but his tone was calm as he replied.

'She is not with you, so I conclude her sentiments are unchanged?'

'More violent than ever—do not think of her, Walter. We were so deceived in her character.'

'Our persecutions were just commencing because of her desire for our set of diamonds to wear at her wedding,' said Marion indignantly; and she related the history of the coverted casket.

Walter's cheek flushed painfully.

'And I've been nearly ready to break my heart—ready to throw away my life wantonly for her sake!' cried he. 'Henceforward, I cast her from my very thoughts, And now I will send you Madame G——, and go myself to find your noble hearted protectors, whose sable skin hides a more generous soul than the peerless loveliness of the heartless Victoria.'

The weary wanderers could scarcely credit their good fortune, when they found themselves amidst the ease and comfort of the luxurious hotel, Rest and quiet were actually imperative and Mrs. Walsingham was seriously ill for several days; but at the expiration of a few weeks, they all appeared in the drawing-room, something like their old selves, Walter joyfully declared. The gravity that came from the severe discipline through which they had passed, could not speedily fade away from either face, but recovered cheerfulness and tranquil content reigned there as well.

Something more came for little Allie and Marion too. Walter's telegraphing at last discovered the whereabouts of Maurice Moreton, and to their mingled delight and astonishment, he suddenly made his appearance with Herbert Weston who had been reported to them as killed while fighting on the confederate side. Instead of which he had gone over to the Federal lines, received a captain's commission, and was now actively serving the Union in the army of the Potomac.

The happy confusion of either spared their mutual raillery, and while Walter drew his mother aside, the delighted lovers were left to the tete-a tete so anxiously desired.

'And you thought I had given you up, my Allie?' whispered the young Englishman; 'nay, I have my home all ready for its mistress. I shall not trust you alone again. Promise that I may take with me when I return, the dearest little Yankee girl that ever boldly confronted Southern tyranny, and bravely defended her own New England.'

And Alice could not refuse. How sweet after her troubled wearisome flitting to rest lovingly on this noble heart.

'They were married in Baltimore, and Marion at the same time became the wife of Captain Herbert Weston, remaining with her mother in the pleasant home, Walter took care to provide in that city, while her husband returned to his regiment at the front.

They were married at the church, and certinly there were three well satisfied spectators, if no more. Joe, and Sam, and Phil, all rigged in navy blue, and three as happy fellows as serve under the stars and stripes in the worthy cause of good old Uncle Sam—freemen now, with souls and bodies owning no earthly master, and all established against want by the generous present bestowed by 'Miss Alice's English beau,' as Jo named him, when he left with his bride for his home across the ocean.

Victoria's fate is still to be decided, Col. Fitz Hugh was killed in battle before the great victory, and consequently the marriage never came. She has lived to see the hated Yankee come to the terrible oppressed, and much suffering East Tennessee. Perhaps that is punishment enough for the haughty and violent spirit, if not, it will suffice when she learns that Lieut. Commander Walter Walsingham, only a month or so ago, took to his name and heart, a lovely New England wife, who, come what may, will never forsake or cease to love him.

Puns and Points.

"There is no living with you," as the thief said to Jack Ketch.

"None of your raillery," as the stage coach said to the steam engine,

Angry man to cool opponent—"You'll come to the gallows some day."

Cool one—"With pleasure, if you will only let me know when you are to be hung."

The man who put up a stove-pipe without profanity has been found, and a company have secured him for exhibition in the principal cities. He will draw better than the pipe.

A dull day, and an empty pocket, and being in love, affect a man's spirits most seriously.

Why is a lawyer's mouth like a toll-bar gate? Because it is seldom opened but for money.

Why is a journey by railroad like a street row? Because it is a low commotion. (locomotion.)

The ladies of Rochester are so zealous in looking up cast-off clothing for the sufferers in Tennessee and Mississippi, that the gentleman have to wear their best clothes every day to keep them from being sent off.

A Quaker hearing a person tell how much he felt for another who was in distress and needed assistance dryly asked him, "Friend, hast thou felt in thy pocket for him?"

An army chaplain preaching to his soldiers exclaimed: "If God is with us, who can be against us?" "Jeff Davis and the devil," promptly exclaimed one of our boys.

Why is a man ascending Mount Vesuvius like an Irishman trying to kiss a pretty girl?" Because he is trying to get to the mouth of the "crater."

An old sea captain said he never knew but one man who had a good excuse for going to sea, and that was Noah, for had he remained on shore he would have been drowned.

The meanest man in the world lives in New Jersey. In helping him out of the river once, a man tore the collar of his coat. The next day he sued him for assault and battery.

OLD MAIDS.—Many of the satirical aspersions cast upon old maids tell more to their credit than is generally imagined. If a woman is remarkably neat in person she will certainly 'die an old maid,' And if she is kind and humane to the animals about her nothing can save her from the appellation of 'an old maid.' In short we hear always that neatness modesty economy and humanity are never failing characteristics of 'an old maid.'

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1864.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Military Strategy.

We think that those of our people who are most conversant with the management of Indian matters on the frontier, would not feel disposed to claim, in behalf of the officer in charge of this district, any great amount of military skill, as displayed in the employment of the forces under his command for the protection of the frontier. If it is his intention to protect the settlers on the border, the stations for the troops should be outside of the line of settlements. As it is now, and has been nearly all the past year, the settlers do picket duty for the troops. Why so many soldiers have been kept, in Mankato and in other places in the interior is, probably, a profound military problem only understood by great strategists in the science of war. Ordinary mortals would suppose that the place for the regiments intended to guard the frontier from Indian depredations would be on the extreme headwaters of the Watonwan, Cottonwood and Redwood, as no Indian forays are expected Mississippiward

That there is something wrong is apparent, when we state that one company in this vicinity have not yet received any arms but their sabres, though the regiment has been full for several months. Surely, the government is not now deficient in arms for its troops.

We see by the Press of the 25th, that a correspondent, writing from Fort Ridgely, volunteers the opinion that the line of stockades cannot be extended any farther west than last year. If this writer is correct, we think the best thing the Government can do is to order the troops now here to the Potomac, and let the settlers take care of themselves. The Indians will not attack the settlements in force, and if several hundred soldiers are to be kept at Fort Ridgely, the same as has been the case here heretofore, the settlers ought as well make up their minds that no protection will be afforded them, and act accordingly. A different policy ought to be adopted, and the troops stationed far in advance of the line of settlements.

Our Indian Troubles.

From all the sources from which we have been able to gather information in regard to our Indian troubles on the frontier, we do not think there is cause for any great alarm. This writing sensation articles with attractive headings, that have a tendency to drive back the thousands of emigrants that are now wending their way hitherward to settle in this section, is all wrong; and will result in a stampede of the settlers, when such a result can be avoided. We have no wish however, to conceal the fact that a few Indians are prowling about on the frontier, more for plunder than for killing the settlers. Such is undoubtedly the fact. Yet, they have not appeared in such force as to overwhelm the troops stationed at the various outposts. Their appearance at this time, and so close to the stations where abundant troops are quartered, is owing, we believe, to a want of vigilance on the part of those who have had the protection of the frontier under their immediate supervision.

Let us see what has thus far occurred.

Ten Indians attacked two soldiers near Spirit Lake, and were compelled to retire with a loss of three killed and one wounded, on the 16th.

On the following day, a boy named Moss, living with Mr. Jargnson, was killed near Chanyuska station, and his body was found the next morning, unscalped.

On the 18th, a soldier of the Sixth Regiment, stationed at Lake Hanska, was fired upon by an Indian, and seriously wounded, while out fishing. There were three of the Indians, and it is probably they were the same party that killed the boy.

Col Pfender has killed one Indian on the Cottonwood, and Col McPhail near Red Wood, has killed two, making six altogether, that have been killed.

It is stated that Scouts have seen tracks of twenty Indians on a ploughed field, and that they were headed towards the settlements; but the Indians themselves have not been up to this point.

We do not deny but what small bands of Indians are, or have been in the vicinity of the settlements, but to every Indian there is at least ten or fifteen soldiers, and a judicious disposition of them will afford safe protection to every settler on the frontier, and prevent a repetition of these incursions by the savages.

Cancelled Land Warrants.

We notice in the St. Peter Tribune quite a list of land warrants that have been cancelled on account of forgery in assignments &c. Interested parties will do well to give this matter their immediate attention.

TELEGRAPH NEWS.

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA.

NEW YORK, May 20.—The action at Spottsylvania resulted in the success of Gen. Grant in gaining an advantageous position on the enemy's right. This was the object of the attack by Grant.

Our entire loss in the engagement will not exceed 1,000 in killed, wounded and missing.

No general officers were either killed or wounded.

Up to 10 o'clock to-day the battle had not been renewed.

The position occupied by Lee is a vast entrenched camp. Its natural strength has been increased by the erection of fortifications which were built long ago in anticipation of their need.

Lee manifests no disposition to come out.

The most reliable information from the front to-day is, that Grant succeeded yesterday in nearly turning Lee's right,

This was done by a sudden movement of bodies of troops to the complete surprise of Lee, more than by actual fighting, except with artillery, was only for the purpose of making feints while the strategic work was going on.

It was a question whether the positions of both armies was not changed this evening in consequence of the successful operations of Grant yesterday.

If Grant fights to-day he has an army as strong in numbers as it was when it crossed the Rapidan—relatively much stronger.

Owing to the important changes of troops made on the evening of the 17th and the general advance made, it is thought that the next battle will be on the Anna River.

Eight of Mosby's guerrillas were captured yesterday, loaded with plunder from our dead and wounded.

The rebels taking advantage of our change of position massed their troops on our right, but were anticipated in a charge on their rifle pits. Several of their guns and a number of prisoners were captured.

The Herald's Spottsylvania correspondent of the 17th, says Grant had plans perfected for a crushing attack on Friday and Saturday last, but the storm prevented and the vantage ground was lost, the enemy shifting position May 18.

It is the subject of merriment that the famous Hampton Legion, the flower of chivalry, was repulsed by negro troops of Gen. Ferrier's command.

NEW YORK, May 21.—[Special to Post]—Washington, May 21.—Private advices from the Army of the Potomac confirm the previous statement that Lee's army is smaller than it was estimated, having been greatly reduced by recent battles.

PHILADELPHIA, May 19.—A special to the Evening Telegraph contains the following: It is reported that advices from the army of the Potomac up to 9 o'clock A. M [illegible] received, and show that the 2nd corps advanced successfully, turning the enemy's left flank and capturing 100 guns with many prisoners. It is rumored that Lee is falling back slowly, and has been forced to evacuate his works. If this be true the total overthrow will soon be consummated.

NEW YORK, May 22.—A Herald's special correspondent near Spottsylvania 21st, 8 A. M. says our troops were moving all night to a new position. This morning the General Headquarters were broken up and nearly the whole armies are in motion Precisely where our next halting place will be, time alone can determine. The general expectation is we shall have hard fighting in the morning. Another correspondent says of the fight on Tuesday night, in which the raw heavy artillery acted so handsomely, our loss was but half the number originally stated. A rebel deserter says their loss was double ours and represents the enemy as very much chagrined at their failure to turn our right. The 9th corps now occupies the position in advance of two lines of works held by the enemy a few days since, so that our progress, if slow, is at least sure and steady.

A rebel Lieutenant states that Lee's army numbered before the battles from 80 to 90,000, and that he has lost from 25,000 to 30,000. He also says the rebel army has plenty of provisions.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The World correspondence says that in the event of Grant flanking Lee, as he will eventually do, and that beyond peradventure, a fact which even Lee himself admits, the rebel army will fall back, contesting as it goes, at every strong position, to the immediate vicinity of Lynchburg, which I now learn from a prisoner is being heavily fortified, according to rebel camp rumor, and will fight the main and decisive battle of the war there.

NEW YORK, May 23.—The Tribune's correspondent states that ten thousand new troops repulsed three divisions of Ewell's corps.

At three o'clock Friday morning Birney's, Crawford's, and Russel's Divisions advanced. The movement was so rapid and unexpected that the rebel picket line was captured almost to a man and our forces swept on until over two miles had been gained and hundreds of prisoners captured.

Prisoners state that Lee came with them across the Ny river, and rode along their lines and addressed the brigade, telling them they were to undertake a movement which if successful would be fatal to the Yankees, and adjured them to make it successful. He told them they were close to our rich stores and immense baggage train and a determined assault would give them everything we possessed.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—General Meade has issued an order complimenting Gen. Tyler's Division and Gen Ketching's Brigade for their gallantry in the action of Thursday. There was no fighting on Friday.

The sixty hostages who were arrested in Fredericksburg, arrived in this city this morning, and were committed to the capitol prison.

NEW YORK, May 21.—A former dispatch of the 20th to the Herald, states that squads of rebel prisoners continue to arrive in a dilapidated condition, who express hopes that the campaign will be concluded soon, to prevent their exchange.

Sheridan's forces have left Haxall's landing and will soon be heard from.

BALTIMORE, May 23.—A letter from Fort Monroe of the 21st states that rebel cavalry had attacked Fort Powhattan, James River, making three charges, which were all repulsed with heavy loss and disorganization. But slight loss on our side.

NEW YORK, May 23.—The Tribune's telegraphic correspondence dated Thursday morning, says the rebels advanced on our entrenched line across the Pamunkey and engaged our pickets, but were driven back. The firing on our skirmish line during the day was incessant.

Our wounded probably number one hundred and fifty.

Towards dark the rebels made a vigorous attempt to force our skirmishers from the roads but were not successful. Our defences being greatly strengthened.

Rebel deserters [illegible] thirty [illegible] came B[illegible]

Last Thursday morning a rapid artillery firing commenced in front, but ceased soon after, probably temporarily. A rebel battery in a ravine on our front was pounding away at the woods on the right while we were dropping a shell or two into their works. Fighting was expected on that day as the rebels hoped to take our position.

LATEST NEWS.

NEW YORK, May 24.—The Army of the Potomac is again on the march towards Richmond. During the night Hancock's corps, which had held the left of our lines in front of Spottsylvania Court House took up the march, moving on the road parallel with Ny river and at 2 o'clock this morning arrived at Guinea's station, on the Fredericksburg and Richmond Railroad 12 miles due south from Fredericksburg; thence pushed onward following the railroad and to-night finds the head of Hancock's column at Bowling Green, 18 miles south of Fredericksburg. The other corps have been to day following the same general line and are now passing the point at which this dispatch is dated.

You will observe from these indications the Commanding General has effected a turning of the right flank of Lee, who is now hastily falling back to take up a new defensive position. It is expected his next stand will be on the South Anna river, although he may endeavor to hit us while moving by a flank movement against us as he did when outflanked in his lines on the Rapidan. Heavy firing in the face of this movement is heard across the Ny, where one of our columns is moving south of west.

Guinea's station is the point of confluence of the Po and Ny rivers, and at this point the stream is crossed by Guinea's bridge which is in our possession.

Our army is now all gone from the front which it has held before Spottsylvania Court House the past two weeks.

Our present front while it puts us in a very advantageous position in regard to the enemy at the same time perfectly covers our communications which are via Fredericksburg and Acquia creek. The railroad will soon be all right from Acquia creek to Fredericksburg and will doubtless be put in order south of that point as we advance.

YOUNG LADIES' SELECT SCHOOL.—This school, taught by Miss Ellen Gillette, is meeting with good success, and its management gives general satisfaction.

MILITIA DRILL.—One week from to-morrow June 4th, the militia of the State will be required to devote nearly half a day to drilling.

THE Sewing Circle and Mite Society will meet at the residence of Mrs. J. J. Shanblint next Tuesday afternoon and evening.

Captains Slaughters and Davy's Companies of 2nd Cavalry left town Monday for the frontier. Co. E. left Madelia Wednesday for Leavenworth.

THE ladies, who last week, solicited money from our citizens in behalf of the Sanitary Fair at St. Louis, succeeded in raising one hundred and fifty dollars. They deserve credit for their earnest efforts.

THE BAKERS ARE COMING.—These celebrated singers are advertised to sing in this place on Monday and Tuesday evenings, the 13th and 14th of June.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' Soldiers' Aid Society will be held at the house of Mrs. Judge Branson on the first Thursday in June. A general attendance is requested.

GLASSWARE.—A lady told her husband the other day that she should sue for a bill of divorce if he didn't buy her a set of goblets at White & Mark's store. He went immediately and bought two sets. His wife was perfectly delighted.

NOTICE.—From and after the first of June subscribers to the St. Paul Daily Press, who wish, will receive their papers at their residences at five o'clock every morning. The price of the daily will be 20 cents per week, 85 cents per month, or $2.40 per quarter, payable, in advance, to the carrier, or at our office.

PUBLIC Speakers and Singers will find Brown's Bronichal Troches" beneficial in clearing the voice before speaking or singing, and relieving the throat after any unusual exertion of the vocal organs, having a peculiar adaption to affections which distrub the organs of speech.

In consequence of the sickness of Wm. Russell, Marshal Pugh has appointed Charles Mansfield in his stead. Mr. Mansfield is a discharged soldier of the first regiment, is competent, and highly deserving of the position.

SAD ACCIDENT.—Otto Kaupp, a clerk in Meagher's Store, was thrown from his horse, while out riding last Saturday, breaking his left arm, below the elbow. He struck on his face, and was considerably bruised about the forehead. Dr. McMahan was called who dressed his injuries, and he is now doing well.

Our readers will be pained to learn that Capt, George Hilton of Co. G. 5th Wisconsin, was severely wounded at the battle of Spottsylvania C. H. He was shot through the abdomen, and there is but little hope of his recovery. He is a son of Aaron Hilton, Esq., of this place.

MCCORMICK'S REAPERS,—We direct the attention of farmers to the advertisement in another column, of these justly celebrated reapers, Mr. Hall, of this place, is agent for them, and all orders sent to him will be promtly executed.

DEPARTED.—E. P. Freeman, Esq., and family, started for the East Wednesday morning last, on a visit to his friends in Connecticut. He will be absent a month or six weeks.

Ephraim Cole has also left us for a season, and gone to spend the summer in Rochester, Minn.

HEADQUARTERS.—The headquarters of all the small posts this side of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers have been established at Ward's store, as will be seen by his official anouncement elsewhere. We have examined his splendid stock of goods, and agree with him that it is a good place to go and get rich.

A CARD.—The ladies of Mankato will please accept the thanks of those of Co. E. Second Cavalry, who were invited to participate in the very pleasant and agreeable entertainment provided for them at the residence of Lewis D. Lewis at Le Hillier on the evening of Wednesday, the 18th inst. Long may they live to vary the monotony of the soldier's life. When we are far away, we will remember them, and remem-member, too that they do "miss us at home," and others

J. P. DAVIS

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—After this week we shall strike from our list all those subscribers whose terms of subscription have expired. Contrary to our rule, requiring advance payment, we have allowed about forty names to remain on our list after their time was out, thinking that they would renew. With blank paper at 21½ cents per pound, we don't propose to furnish a paper on trust any longer, and our friends will oblige us by remitting the amount of their unpaid subscriptions, which they can ascertain by noticing the date opposite their names.

IMPORTANT NEWS.—An anxious newspaper correspondent called on the President a few days since to get the news from Grant's Army, The President replied that he too was anxious to get the news, and so were all the people, but the latest news he could give was that White & Marks were selling dress goods and Summer clothing the cheapest of anybody this side of the Rocky Mountains. The correspondent immediately telegraphed that he had started for their store to make large purchases.

DISTRICT SCHOOLS.—The Board of School Directors inform us that it is their intention to commence the district schools on Monday next. Miss Clara McKenney has been engaged as one of the teachers, and we understand that Miss Angeline Crosby will be the other. They are both well qualified. One of the schools will be held in the old log school house, and the other in the vacant room on the first floor of the American House building.

THE MESSRS FAIRBANKS are making sixteen of their largest Hopper Scales for an Elevator now being built in St. Louis, which will be the first one in that city, and also a similar number for an Elevator which the Michigan Southern R.R. are now building in Detroit. These will be among the largest and finest elevators in the country, and show something of the improvements making at different points for handling the immense grain crop of the West.

PERSONAL.—F. McMamara, Esq., Chief Engineer of the Winona and Mankato Railroad arrived in town on Wednesday last, accompanied by his surveying party. He is on business connected with the location of the railroad.

Major Cyrus Hill, of Concord, N. H. arrived in town a day or two ago, and is stopping at the Mankato House.

C. C. Proctor, road agent for Burbank & Co's stages on the Winona route, has been stopping in town. We are glad to see him looking so well.

THE ENROLLMENT.—Deputy Provost Marshal Pugh has divided the county into four districts, and assigned the towns to the officers as follows:

JOSIAH KEENE'S DISTRICT—Mankoto, Lime Le Roy and Jamestown.

B. Y. COFFIN'S DISTRICT—South Bend, Judson, Watonwan, Butternut Valley and Winnebago Agency.

M. B. HAYNES' DISTRICT—Fox Lake, Vernon Centre, and Shelbyville.

CHAS. MANSFIELD'S DISTRICT—Mapleton, Danville and Sterling.

We believe the officers have already qualified, and entered upon the discharge of their duties. The enrollment is to be completed by the 10th of June.

KARL KAHR, THE MAGICIAN—A private note from the agent of Prof, Kahr, informs us that he will be in Mankato this week, probably this or to-morrow evening, and favor our citizens with one of his entertainments. The Elkhart (Ind.) Review speaks of him as follows;

"Professor Karl Kahr, the magician, has been giving a series of entertainments at the City Hall, this week, to a large and delighted audience. Unlike most of the profession, this gentleman performs his feats without the aid of machinery—exhibiting to the eyes of the audience all the appliances of his trade, and then deluding them by skillful manipulations. His gun feat is truly fearful and wonderful. He takes a gun with which he is entirely unfamiliar, invites any gentleman in the audience to load and fire at him, and actually catches the identical ball between his teeth. The "Professor offers $100 to any man who will detect him in the deception.

WE think the Record was a little hasty last week in stating that the appointments of Messrs. Russell and Haynes as Enrolling officers were political ones. Marshal Pugh informs us that his sole object was to get competent men, and not a thought was given to their political caste. We know that he made inquiries as to whether there were any discharged soldiers whom he could appoint from that section. Not knowing of any, he made the appointments as published last week. As will be seen elsewhere, [illegible] declined, and Chas [illegible] pointed in [illegible]

THE HISTORY OF HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS.—The most remarkable medicine of the day, and the many cures that have been performed with it in cases of Liver Complaint, Dispepsia, Nervous Debility, and other diseases arising from a disordered stomach or liver, places it at once among the most astonishing discoveries that has taken place in the medical world. The diseases to which bitters are applicable are so universal that there are but few of our friends who may not test their virtues in their own families or circle of acquaintances and prove to their own satisfaction that there is at least one remedy among the many advertised medicines, deserving the public commendation.

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do; will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machaine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood; and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

A SINGLE BOX OF BRANDRETH'S PILLS—contains more vegetable extractive matter than twenty boxes of any pills in the world besides, fifty five hundred physicians use them in their practice to the exclusion of other purgatives. The first letter of their value is yet scarcely appreciated. When they are better known sudden death and continued sickness will be of the past. Let those who know them speak right out in their favor It is a duty which will save life.

Our races are subject to a redundancy of vitiated bile at this season, and it is as dangerous as it is prevalent; but Brandreth's Pills afford an invaluable and efficient protection. By their occasional use we prevent the collection of those impurities, which, when in sufficient quantities, cause so much danger to the body's health. They soon cure liver complaint, dyspepsia loss of appetite, pain in the head, heartburn, pain in the breast-bone, sudden faintness and costiveness. Sold by Wickersham, & Kilgore, Mankato Minn, and by all respectable dealers in medicines. 42

SEWING MACHINES.

THESE Machines make the lock stitch alike on both sides, and use less than half the thread and silk that the single or double thread loop-stitch Machines do: will Hem, Fell, Gather, Cord, Braid, Bind, &c., and are better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in use to the frequent changes and great variety of sewing required in a family, for they will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect, or from the finest gauze to the heaviest beaver cloth, or even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of Machine whatever!!!

They are simple in construction, and easily understood: and if any part is broken by accident, it is readily replaced.

These are PECULIAR FACTS, and will go far to determine the choice of any intelligent buyer.

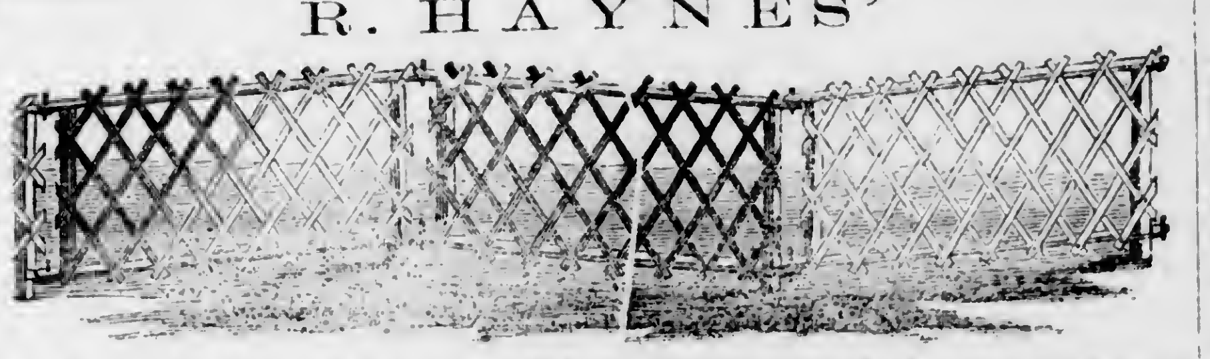
R. HAYNES'



Portable Brace Fence!

PATENTED APRIL 7, 1863.

WE claim for this Fence greater strength and durability with less expense than any ordinary farm fence No farmer who studies economy and convenience in the management of his farm will be without it. The First Premium was awarded to Mr. Haynes' Portable Fence, at the late State Fairs in Ohio and Michigan, and at several County Fairs. Read the following extract:

"Among the many things we saw on exhibition at the State Fair was Haynes' Portable Brace Fence This fence seems to be a great improvement over most Fences of the kind It is very strong, and is so braced that wind can have no more effect upon it, if as much, as upon a common rail fence It is light, yet heavy enough for all farm purposes Its cost is but little, and much labor is saved by using this fence, as it is easily put up, and in after years easily repaired Every farmer ought to see this remarkable fence. We hope Mr. Haynes will be induced to exhibit it at our County Fair.—Medina (Ohio) Gazette.

Mr H has also invented a mould or bench upon which this fence is made. By using this bench any farmer can make the fence at a rapid rate. Full directions for making the bench and the fence upon it accompany each deed For farm or township right's address M. B HAYNES, Agent for Minnesota,

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in disease of the Stomach, Liver and bowels, Cures, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex arising from Boodily Weakness whether inherent in the system or produced by special causes. Nothing that is not wholesome genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of Hostetters Stomach Bitters. This popular preparations contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants. It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes. Hostetters Bitters may be relied on as a safeguard. In districts infested with Fever and Ague, it has been found infallible as a preventive and irresistible as a remedy and thousands who resort to it under apprehensions of an attack, escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health, within a few days by the use of Hostetter's Bitters. The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic and hence it works wonders in cases of Dispepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless apperent, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs. Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous attacks, Lowness of spirits and fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes. The agony of bilious colic, is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally restoring to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented. As a general tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-enforce and re-establish them. Last but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements, present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day. No family medicine has been so universally, and it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as Hostetter's Bitters. Prepared by Hostetter and Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Storekeepers everywhere. 23

LADIES NATIONAL COVENANT.

Address to the Women of America.

In the capital of our country we have this day organized a central society for the suppression of extravagance, the diminution of foreign imports and the practice of economy in all our social relations. To this society we have given the name of 'The Ladies' National Covenant.' Its object is a good and generous one, which should inspire a spirit of patriotism worthy of women who are the glory of a great nation. For [illegible] example [illegible] a [illegible] and encouraging.

In 1770 the women of Massachusetts, actuated by the same impulse [illegible] as assembled in the City of Boston, as we have met here, and [illegible] to serve the country by an effort of self-sacrifice far greater than [illegible] called upon to make.

[illegible] a pledge [illegible] from the use of tea [illegible] of the time, and [illegible] all the social gatherings for which New England [illegible] Three days after [illegible] of blooming young girls met in the same place and signed like pledges. From that [illegible] a [illegible] of women non-importation societies sprung up that produced an effect upon the mother country almost equal to that created by the success of our revolutionary armies. During all the terrors of the war these noble women held firmly to their pledges, and by their earnestness awoke the sympathy and co-operation of every sister colony in the land. The spirit thus aroused extended itself to imported goods of all kinds, and every hearthstone was turned into an independent manufactory. Thus it was that the flax wheel, the hatchel, and the hand loom became sublime instruments of freedom in the hands of American women. The house mothers of '76 not only kept their pledge of non-importation, but with their own hands wrought from the raw material the garments which clothed themselves, their husbands, and their children. The pledge which they took and kept so faithfully evoked not only great self-sacrifice, but hard hard toil, such as the women of the present day scarcely dream of. Had they not endured and labored while their husbands fought, we should have had no mighty Union to pray and struggle for now.

We, the women of '64, have the same object to attain and the same duties to perform which were so nobly accomplished by the women of '76. Shall we not follow their example, and take up cheerfully the lesser burdens that the welfare of our country demands? They gave up the very comforts of life without a murmur; can we refuse when a sacrifice of feminine vanity is alone required? Can we hesitate to yield up luxuries that are so unbecoming when the very earth trembles under our feet from the tread of the armed men going down to battle, and almost every roof throughout the land shelters some mother lamenting the son who has [illegible] or [illegible] bones [illegible] among the masses of slain heroes, that she will never learn where to seek for his grave?

When the wife of a great prince whose husband was absent at the siege of Troy, was urged by her friends to put on her royal robes and be cheerful, [illegible] husband [illegible] wears a helmet? [illegible] No new raiment shall [illegible] and in sadness [illegible] pass the time of this mournful war.

[illegible] the [illegible] in the Revolution [illegible] in her homespun dress and [illegible] performing more than [illegible] duties. Compare the spirit of these women with the reckless extravagance which has marked the duration of this terrible struggle for the Union, and the contrasts is indeed humiliating. Still the women of America are not unworthy of their ancestors. Thoughtless they may be, and luxuriously extravagant from long habits of prosperity, but cruel and unjust never! Appeal to their reason and gentle feelings, and the women of this day will prove themselves capable of as noble deeds as ever marked the struggles of the Revolution. Convince them of the evils their thoughtlessness is producing, and the remedy is certain.
